At Sunset Time.

On toward the west the passing day,
As tho' reluctant seeming,
Soft stole to where the flame-clouds lay
To where the sun hung beaming.
And yet she seemed full loth to go,
E'en tho' the world was shadowed so,
But looked back o'er the dimpled hill
To where the world lay dim and still,—
To where the world lay dreaming.

At sunset time we steal away
To where the sky is gleaming;
To where the light that marks the day
Is all our heaven seeming.
And yet we seem full loth to go,
E'en tho' the world is shadowed so.
But look back, with regretful eyes,
To where the world in twilight lies,—
To where the world is dreaming.

The School Ma'am's Victory.

The school directors of District No. 19, Perry Township, were holding a meeting.

Nobody would have thought it. The Chairman was leaning against his front gate with his checked shirt sleeves turned back and an ax in his hand, surveying the other two members of the Board, who stood outside the fence.

It was a meeting, nevertheless; and its object was nothing less important than the selection of a teacher for the fall term.

"Lyman Doty spoke to me about having the school," said the Chair, dubiously.

"Lyman Doty!" exclaimed Steve Tenney, a stalwart young fellow, with thick brown hair, white teeth and a square chin to make up for his lack of downright good looks. "Why Lyme Doty couldn't teach a baby. He quit school before I did, long enough, and he hasn't studied anything but potatoes and winter wheat since, that I know of. Better stick to his farm—eh, Larkin!"

"Guess you're right," responded the third member of the Board, a little man with a cheerful face and a tuft of gray hair sticking straight out from his chin.

And the chairman nodded his agreement.

"Well," continued little Mr. Larkin, with an air of importance, "I've had an application that I guess will suit. It's a sort of relative of my wife's, and just as nice a girl as ever was. Smart, too. She's got a certificate for two years, last examination. She'd make a splendid teacher, Molly Sanborn would."

"Sanborn!" said Steve Tenny, shortly; "any connection with the Sanborns over on the river?"

"That's where she's from," said Mr. Larkin. "She's old John Sanborn's girl—him that died last winter."

Steve frowned.

"You won't put her into that school, then, with my consent!" he said determinedly.

"What!" said Mr. Larkin, with a gasp, while the chairman stared.

"What would you think," the young man responded, "if a man sold you fifty head of sheep at a good price, and half of them died off in the next week of a disease he must have known beforehand? That was the trick John Sanborn served me. And he laughed in my face when I wanted my money back. No, sir! I can't conscientiously consent to putting any of the Sanborns in that school. Bad lot, in my opinion!"

Mr. Larkin's small bright eyes snapped.

"Old Sanborn wasn't too straight, and everybody knows it," he admitted. "But what that's got to do with Molly is more than I can see. She's as fine a girl as you ever set eyes on; not a bit of her father about her."

"Well, well, fight it out between you," said the chairman, good-naturedly; and returned to his wood chopping.

The tall young man and the little old man walked up the street together, talking briskly.

Mr. Larkin was hot and indignant; Steve was cool and immovable.

"There don't seem to be any mercy in you," said the former, almost tearfully, as Steve was preparing to turn in at his gate. "If they'd been left well off, it would be different; but they're poor as poverty, and Molly needs the place the worst way."

"You hadn't mentioned that," said the young man, turning back. "If that's the case ——"

Mr. Larkin walked away triumphant five minutes later.

But Steve Tenney had surrendered with bad grace.

"I couldn't hold out after that, you see," he said to his mother, relating the story over their tea; "but I don't approve of it. There's not much good in the Sanborns or I lose my guess!"

School began two weeks later, when the first cool wave was depopulating front porches and increasing the attraction near kitchen stoves.

Steve Tenney held to his opinion concerning the new school teacher and acted accordingly.

He did not call at the schoolhouse the first day, as was his custom, to leave the register and see if anything was wanted—the chairman having turned these duties over to his younger colleague.

He sent the register by a boy, and was utterly indifferent as to whether anything was wanted. He turned the subject when the new teacher was mentioned; and he avoided Mr. Larkin's comfortable home, where the teacher boarded.

The little man made him a call, however, a month or so after school had begun.

"Guess you'll have to own up to being in the wrong, Steve," he began. "We haint had a teacher for years that's given the satisfaction that Molly does. The children rave about her—all of 'em."

But Steve was unimpressed.

"My opinion has yet to be altered," he said rather stiffly.

And Mr. Larkin looked discouraged.

"She spoke about needing a new broom and water pail," he said as he rose. "I told her she'd better come to you about it."

"That schoolhouse had a new broom last term, and water pail term before last!" said the young director emphatically.

And Mr. Larkin took a discomfited leave.

The next Sunday evening the young man, sitting in the pew of a small wooden church with his mother, and allowing his eyes to rove about during the rather long sermon, suddenly discovered a new face, and sat studying it for the remainder of the evening.

It was that of a young girl—not a remarkably pretty girl, but fair and fresh and innocent, with a bright intelligence in her dark eyes and a sweetness in her full lips.

"Who is she!' was the first question after the services were concluded addressed, as it happened, to little Mr. Larkin, who had come in late.

"That!" the latter asked in astonishment. "Why, that's our teacher—that's Mollie Sanborn! I am waiting to take them home."

Steve Tenney found himself wishing quite frequently after that that the new teacher would come to him about the broom and water pail.

Not that he should furnish them if he found that they were not needed, but he felt that he should not object to an interview with the school teacher.

He even mentioned the subject to Mr. Larkin carelessly when he met him one day.

"Well, you see," was the response, "she sort of hates to come to you. The way you felt about her having the school has got all around town, and I s'pose she's heard of it. She can't help what her father was, Molly can't, and she's real sensitive."

The young man looked disturbed.

That afternoon he left his work at an early hour—not, however, admitting to himself his purpose in doing so—and strolled down the street, turning off—but he persuaded himself that it was not intentional—in the direction of the school house.

"I might as well go in and see about that broom and water pail," he said to himself when he stood opposite the little bare-looking building.

And he went in accordingly.

The little teacher looked considerably startled when she opened the door to him. She dropped the spelling book she held, and her voice was hardly steady as she expressed her gratification at seeing him.

Evidently, Steve reflected, some idiot had pointed him out to her at church the other evening. He sat down in a front seat feeling unpleasantly ogreish.

She was hearing the last spelling class. How pretty she looked, standing there in her blue calico dress and white apron. What a sweet voice she had, though putting out "hen, men, pen," to a lot of fidgeting youngsters could hardly show it to the best advantage.

When the class was dismissed, and the last small student had rushed whooping down the street, the teacher and the young director stood looking at each other with some awkwardness.

"I thought I'd come in," said Steve at last, apologetically, "and see if anything is needed."

He did not mention the fact of his being some six weeks late in the performance of his duty.

The girl dropped her eyes timidly.

"I—don't think so," she murmured.

"What a brute she must think me!" Steve reflected, with some self-disgust.

He turned carelessly to the corner where the broom stood.

"Isn't this pretty far gone?" he said, with a conscience-stricken glance at its stubby end.

And the little teacher nodded.

"Your water pail seems to leak," the director went on, indicating the empty bucket and the wet floor.

"Yes," the girl assented.

"I'll see that you have new ones," Steve concluded.

And he was rewarded by a grateful glance from the teacher's soft eyes as she took her hat from its nail.

He took her lunch basket from her hand as they started away together, and having taken it, could hardly surrender it short of Larkin's gate.

He was a little reluctant to surrender it even then. For their first awkwardness had quite worn off; their walk had been far from unpleasant, and they were feeling very well acquainted.

He walked home in an agreeable absorption, repeating to himself the things she had said and recalling her pretty way of saying them.

He did not pause to consider that it was old John Sanborn's daughter of whom he was thinking; he was only conscious that she was a bright young girl, whom it was charming to look at and listen to.

His pleasant mood was rudely interrupted by little Larkin, who dropped in that evening.

"Lyme Doty couldn't have the school," he observed, with a chuckle," "but it looks as though he was going to have the teacher!"

"What?" said Steve, with a sudden unexplainable sinking of the heart.

"He's hanging around considerable, anyhow," said Mr. Larkin. "Went to visit the school last week and he was asking me today whether Molly's got anyway of getting home Friday night. He said he'd just as lief take her in his buggy as not, Molly generally walks; but I guess she'll be glad of a lift."

"You don't mean to tell me," said Steve, warmly, "that she'd have anything to do with him?"

Mr. Larkin stared. What could Steve care with whom old John Sanborn's daughter had to do?

But he only said, deprecatingly:

"Well, Lyme's a good steady fellow."

"Humph!" was the scornful rejoinder.

The young man mused long and seriously when his visitor was gone, and went to bed with a lighter heart, having come to a firm conclusion.

When the new teacher closed school the next Friday night she was feeling rather worn out, as she was apt to feel at the end of the week; nor did the prospect of the four miles' walk home serve to cheer her.

She locked the door and started down the path with a sigh.

A neat little buggy was coming briskly up the road. Molly gave a start as the driver pulled up the horse and sprang to the ground.

It was the young director, and he was coming toward her.

"I won't make any excuse, Miss Sanborn," he said, with a humorous solemnity. "I won't say I'm going over the river on business, and happened to think you might like to ride. The truth is that it's a carefully laid plot. Will you be an aider and abettor?"

The little teacher laughed appreciatively as he helped her into the buggy.

"I must stop at Mr. Larkin's and leave my dinner pail," she said demurely.

Mr. Larkin was standing at the front gate. He stood staring at the young director as the latter assisted the teacher to the ground and sat down on the horse block waiting for her.

"Lyme Doty was here after Molly, just now," he said gaspingly. "I sent him down to the school house."

"We met him," said Steve. "You see," he added, making a bold attempt at carelessness, but speaking nevertheless, in a shamefaced way, and avoiding the little man's eyes. "You see, I feel as though it's my bounden duty to keep Lyme Doty away from her. Pure impudence, his hanging around her that way."

The little teacher came tripping back and the young director's buggy whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"Steve Tenney's taking Molly home in his buggy," said Mr. Larkin, joining his wife in the kitchen, and sinking dazedly into a chair. "I guess the world's coming to an end!"

"Steve Tenney ain't a fool," his wife responded practically. "I knew he'd get over that ridiculous notion of his—and especially after he'd seen Molly."

"Says he's doing it from a sense of duty," said Larkin, chuckling slowly as the humor of the situation dawned upon him. "Wonder how far his sense of duty will take him?"

"I shouldn't be surprised at anything!" said Mrs. Larkin mysteriously.

The Larkins—and, perhaps, Lyme Doty—were the only people who were surprised when the new teacher gave up the school at the end of the term and was quietly married to the young director.

The chairman of the School Board is wondering over it yet.—[Hartford Times.

The Human Heart.

In the human subject the average rapidity of the cardiac pulsation of an adult male is about 70 beats per minute. These beats are more frequent, as a rule, in young children and women, and there are variations within certain limits in particular persons owing to peculiarities of organization. It would not necessarily be an abnormal sign to find in some particular individuals the habitual frequency of the heart's action from 60 to 65 or 75 to 80 per minute. As a rule, the heart's action is slower and more powerful in fully developed and muscular organizations and more rapid and feebler in those of slighter form. In animals the range is from 25 to 45 in the cold-blooded and 50 upward in the warm-blooded animals, except in the case of a horse, which has a very slow heart beat—only 40 strokes a minute. The pulsations of men and all animals differ with the sea level also. The work of a healthy human heart has been shown to equal the feat of raising five tons four hundredweight one foot per hour, or 125 tons in 24 hours. The excess of this work under alcohol in varying quantities is often very great. A curious calculation has been made by Dr. Richardson giving the work of the heart in mileage. Presuming that the blood was thrown out of the heart at each pulsation in the proportion of 69 strokes per minute, and at the assumed force of nine feet, the mileage of the blood through the body might be taken at 207 yards per minute, seven miles per hour, 168 per day, 61,320 miles per year, or 5,150,880 miles in a lifetime of 84 years. The number of beats of the heart in the same long life would reach the grand total of 2,869,766,000. — [Medical World.

A Queer Barometer.

It is not generally known that the rendered fat of a woodchuck is as good a barometer as any we have today. While in the country a short time ago the writer had occasion to travel through the lower part of Berks. At the house of a friend I was pressed to take an umbrella with me. There was no sign of a storm. I asked why he persisted in so dogged a manner for me to accept the article. "Why," said he, "look at my barometer."

There upon the shelf stood a bottle sealed with beeswax. It was all cloudy. The old gentleman said he had used this one for most twenty years and if a storm was brewing the barometer got cloudy twelve hours before the rain or snow began to fall. In clear weather the oil was always clear. —[Reading (Penn.) Herald.

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

Specific for Plant Lice.

All aphides or plant lice increase so rapidly, says Professor Cook in the New York Tribune, that unless checked they oft-times prove too much for even the most vigorous trees. They are favored by hot, dry weather, hence in such years of drouth as the last two or three in most portions of the United States these insects become exceedingly numerous and enormously destructive. In my round of observation this spring I find the small brown or black eggs very numerous about the buds and twigs of nearly all our fruit trees. It is safe to predict then, that unless we have a very wet season, plant lice will be unusually abundant and destructive this season. A specific for these parasites is: One quart soft soap or quarter pound whale-oil soap dissolved in two quarts hot water and mixed with one pint kerosene. Churn violently till permanently mixed; then add water till you have fifteen pints in all. This should be thrown on to the trees with a force pump in a fine spray, so that it will touch every louse. It kills them and does not harm the tree. It is more effective if applied just before the leaves put out, then it is easy to touch every louse.

Horse-Radish Culture.

Horse-radish requires a deep, mellow, rich soil, so that the roots may be grown in one year large enough for sale, and the land then plowed so as to clean out the myriads of small sprouts that would cover the soil with plants the succeeding year. A heavy dressing of fine manure should be plowed under in the spring, or coarse manure in the fall, replowed deep just before planting, making the land deep and mellow. Then throw up into ridges three feet apart and plant the sets or pieces of root one foot apart along these ridges. Plant last of April to middle of May, and sow radishes, beets, lettuce, etc., between. The additional crop will be no hindrance. The yield of good land is four to six tons per acre, though often less than half that much. It cannot be grown well on poor or stony land, and there is no use trying it. But it is profitable where there is a market for it. It is about as hard to kill out as Canada thistle or Couch grass. It is a good deal of work to prepare the roots for sale. They must be trimmed with a knife, large roots assorted from the small, and then be carefully washed with a scrubbing brush on a board so as to look attractive.—[Prairie Farmer.

Potato Culture.

At one of the New York state institutes Secretary Woodward, of the Agricultural Society, gave his method of potato culture briefly as follows:—"I plant in drills on clover sod manured in the winter. The depth to plough depends on the kind of soil; some soils should not be ploughed deep. Do not spend too much time in preparing the soil, but do that after the potatoes are up. Cultivate within an inch of the hill and use a Planet, Jr., cultivator. I plant with an Aspinwall planter, sixteen inches apart in the row. Cultivate immediately after planting. In two or three days after planting use a smoothing harrow, unless the ground is cloddy or lumpy, then we use a clod crusher. Some varieties sunburn worse than others. White Star is a good variety. Potatoes will yield one-third more if in a trench and the ground is not packed by cultivation. I dig partly with a plough and partly with a fork. I breed my seed by selecting model potatoes to plant, and marking model hills and digging them first. Then we select a small part of these for raising seed from again. I cut more for the size of the piece than for the number of eyes. To kill the old bugs, cut potatoes in slices and soak in a strong solution of Paris green and scatter on the field before the potatoes have come up."—[New York Herald.

Preserving Butter.

A California farmer writes: I have learned by long experience about making what I call good butter and preserving it nice and sweet after it is made. To keep butter good that is made in the fall is one thing, but to keep that good that is made in the summer is quite another. Our best and richest butter is made in May, June and July, when the cows milk strong. The best of butter may easily be kept good till April of the following year, and here is the way I do it: First, it must be good butter when made. All the buttermilk must be worked out. My practice for years has been to thoroughly wash the butter before it is taken out of the churn, and I am confident that the plan is a good one. Salt to suit the taste of those who are to eat it; half an ounce of salt to a pound of butter is about right. Keep out all your saltpetre, sugar or other ingredients. It will keep better without them, and, perhaps, too, without salt, but would not be so palatable. Do up the butter each week, on churning, in neat, round rolls of two or three pounds each, just what you have to put down; cover each roll with a clean muslin cloth, large enough to go round it twice or more, that it will be completely enveloped, and sink it in a strong brine, as strong as the best salt will make it. Stone vessels are the best. When the rolls are in they may be kept down by means of clean, flat stones. When the vessel is full enough and the butter completely covered with the brine add more salt to insure the strength of the brine. Keep it in your cellar or in your spring-house, and see if it is not worth a winter and spring 100 per cent. more than any winter-made butter. In this way I have kept my winter supply of butter for many years, and have never yet failed. But mark, the butter must be good, well worked, and should, by all means, be wrapped up and sunk under the brine the same day it is churned, not kept lying about for two or three days after churning.—[Chicago Times.

Poultry Points.

In warm weather the vermin will multiply rapidly and increase their activity. Extra precaution should be taken to counteract them. The roosts should be washed with kerosene oil; the nest material should be thrown out and burned, fresh hay or straw placed in the boxes and a heaping teaspoonful of sulphur sprinkled in each nest; the dust baths should be replenished and a teaspoonful of sulphur added to the dust; the sitters should be thoroughly cleansed of body lice by Dalmation powder sifted through their feathers.

If an egg gets broken in a nest where a hen is sitting, examine the eggs carefully and wash with tepid water any that are daubed; sometimes no more than two or three eggs will be fouled, but they must be washed or they will not hatch.

Keep the little chicks growing. Feed a little at a time and feed often is the keynote to early laying pullets.

See that the hens have fresh grass. It is almost always necessary to keep them shut within their yards for some weeks now to keep them out of the garden or the mowing. It will take but a few seconds to pull a liberal handful of fresh grass and toss to each pen; try it once and watch the birds devour it; you will be convinced that they enjoy it as much as a feed of wheat. When the hens run at large they eat great quantities of grass (probably half of all the matter consumed by them), and it is a great hardship for them to be shut away from it.

Spade up a part of each yard and sow a few handfuls of oats in the fresh ground; the hens will scratch up a part of it, but some will sprout and grow, giving biddy a bite of green. If practicable shut the hens away from one yard for a couple of weeks; sow oats in it, and when they are three or four inches high let the hens in again. Not only does this give them fresh, green food but it freshens the ground itself. This last is an important matter, as the earth in the yards is contaminated by the droppings and in two or three years becomes poisoned so that it will kill the fowls confined upon it. This poisonous matter can be worked out by growing a crop upon it or by spading it over and sowing grain. If the hens can be moved to other quarters for a season a splendid crop of squashes can be raised in the hen yard. Squashes are rank feeders and greatly enjoy rich ground to run on. I have been told that Mr. Hawkins planted squashes in an acre or so of hen yards last year, and got such a tremendous yield that he debated whether it wouldn't pay to build a spur track from the railroad over to his yards to lighten the labor of shipping them to market!

Don't keep the cocks after you have got all the setting eggs you want. A fricasse makes a good hearty dinner, and you've one less bird to feed when you have eaten him.

It is sometimes a great bother to break up a broody hen that you don't want to set. I keep one pen vacant at this season on purpose to confine broody hens in; of course the nest boxes are removed. It is a comparatively easy matter to break up a broody hen if it is taken in season. If they have been left on the nest one or two nights and become confirmed in their desire to set it is difficult to break them, but if taken to the prison pen at once a couple or days' confinement will usually cure them.—[New England Farmer.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Some milkers kick, whip and pound their cows till they get ugly and bad tempered which changes the milk and spoils the butter.

When squash and egg plants become a few inches high, keep a close watch for bugs. The potato beetle is very destructive to egg plants.

According to Professor Riley, the best way to get rid of the apple-root plant louse is to drench the roots of the infested tree with hot water.

Corn thus far has proven to be the best for ensilage, says Mr. Hadwen of Massachusetts, who thinks the cow-pea will not answer the purpose.

A Marvelous Pleasure Launch.

A pleasure launch—known as of the "Zephyr type"—is now built in England, the motive power of which is obtained from a highly volatile hydrocarbon, one of the early products in the distillation of petroleum, selling in this country for about ten cents a gallon. Within five minutes after lighting up the launch is ready to start at full speed, and, the action being automatic, the boat can run at a speed of from seven to eight miles an hour for several hours without any attention whatever being required, excepting only occasionally lubricating the bearings. The entire central portion of the boat is available for passenger accommodation, giving double accommodation as compared with steam. There is a very large saving in weight of machinery owing to the very small size of the vapor generator, and this reduction in weight renders lighter scantling of hull admissible, so that the launch weighs only a ton, machinery included. The fuel supply requires no attention whatever, being perfectly self-acting, all hand firing being abolished, and owing to the absence of coal the whole arrangement is extremely cleanly. Full speed is maintained with a consumption of one and a quarter gallons of the hydrocarbon per hour.—[Globe-Democrat.

C. G. EASTERBROOK, Publisher.

North High School.

The graduation exercises of the class of '88 took place last Friday evening in the Baptist church, in the presence of a large number of the relatives and friends of the class. Over the door at the entrance to the body of the church was the word "Welcome." The chandeliers were tastefully decorated with green, and the platform was trimmed with an abundance of choice potted plants and cut flowers, pink being the predominating color, with the national flag as a background. Across the front of the organ, with a background of green, was the class motto in pink letters, "The end crowns the work."

Promptly at the time appointed the East Weymouth Orchestra played a march, when the graduating class, headed by the teachers and followed by the other scholars, marched down the aisle, the teachers and graduating class taking seats upon the platform. The young ladies of the class were dressed in white, each wearing a corsage bouquet of pink roses, that being the class color. The exercises were then commenced, each of the graduates taking part, the following order being observed:—

Awarding of Diplomas.

*Rank for four years above .90.

When the awarding of diplomas was reached, G. C. Fisher, Sup't of Schools, rose and said, "You have come here to witness the graduation and do not want to hear a speech from me, but I must say a few words. Last year the school began with 180 pupils, next year it will be over 200. No town of the size of Weymouth has a larger school in proportion to the inhabitants than you, and none better spoken of. It has been said that you have never sent forth a congressman nor a celebrity from your schools, but the town has sent forth men and women who are now filling honored positions throughout the world. A man who through the labor of his hands and brains has accumulated a fortune is worth more than all the artists or statesmen. This is the largest, most enterprising, and most scholarly class that has ever gone forth from the North High school. I congratulate you and want you to be workers, take up some form of labor, push it energetically, and your reward will come in time." Mr. Fisher then, in behalf of the school committee, awarded the diplomas. The following Class Hymn, by Miss Susie B. Litchfield, was then sung by the class:—

Long we've toiled and worked together,
As we climbed to Learning's height;
But the four long years have ended,
We must say farewell to-night.

Many joys and many sorrows,
Met us in our journey on;
Troubles have with pleasures mingled,
But to-night our victory's won.

Though we part, perhaps forever,
Though we meet on earth no more,
There will come a Grand Reunion
When Life's trials all are o'er.

And beyond Time's troubled river,
We shall lay our burdens down;
With the hosts of Life's Alumni,
Leave the cross, and take the crown.

The benediction was pronounced by Rev. George C. King.

The graduates:—

College Preparatory Course, A. Everett Peterson.

Classical Course, Jessie A. Custance, William F. Hunt, Susie B. Litchfield, Kate F. Pierce, Lizzie E. Tirrell.

English Course, John H. Ash, Agnes M. Bates, Cora L. Beard, Clara J. Boyle, Ida M. Callahan, Margaret A. Coyle, Carrie W. Dyer, Alice G. Eagan, Myron P. Ford, Peter F. Griffin, Grace W. Mitchell, Thomas F. O'Brien, Jennie F. Rice, Elizabeth M. Stack, Hannah C. Whelan.

The parts were all well taken, especially the Valedictory by Miss Litchfield, whose delivery was perfect and easy, holding the audience almost spellbound to the close.

The good work done by the ladies of the class in Elocution and Gesture was due to the instruction of Miss May F. Bridgham, of Cohasset, who is a member of the Senior Class of the Boston School of Oratory, and has had charge of the ladies of the class in the departments mentioned for the past two months.

Base Ball.

Mr. J. Henry Whelan, of the firm of M. Sheehy & Co., returned last Saturday from a business trip to the west—At Lansing, Mich., he visited Mayor J. F. Crotty, a former resident of this place, and at Bay City he visited Mr. Crotty's brother Henry, who is in business there.

An apple tree was grafted this season by Mr. F. E. Tilden on the premises of Mr. Geo. E. Fairbanks, and the grafts are now bearing apples.

One of J. J. Loud's patent fireworks cannon, of large calibre, made the welkin ring in the square at early morning of the Fourth.

A lot of railroad ties piled up near the tenement house on Granite street, was fired by exploded crackers the Fourth, but the blaze was soon extinguished by residents.

The rough ledge in front of the Sam'l Reed place is being built up with a face wall to smooth the jagged surface, and a fence constructed along the south end of the lot, making a nice improvement.

A four-horse express team came in contact with the fountain in Lincoln square, Tuesday evening, shattering the lantern on one side.

The work on the new fountain in Garfield square is nearly completed.

The sub-contractor for the brick and stone work on the new building being erected by John S. Fogg at South Weymouth, says that he lost about $7000 on the job.

BRAINTREE NOTES.

Inquiry is frequently made as to the prospect for removal of the dwelling house contiguous to the railroad track at Quincy avenue, but we have not learned that any decisive measures have yet been taken to accomplish this desirable result, though it is stated that the railroad company is ready and willing to make the improvement if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

The water furnished by the Braintree Supply Co. from their filtering galleries is of the best quality and the standpipe gives a pressure of about 90 lbs. in the vicinity of the residence of L. O. Crocker, with a copious supply. Mr. C. N. Wallace has had the water put into his summer residence this week.

Mr. L. O. Crocker has recently exported a lot of his patent Conductors' Punches, for use on various European railroads, which shows that Yankee ingenuity is still ahead in the markets of the Old World.

The grain conveyor at Ambler & Hobart's mill in East Braintree, built from the new stub track across the street, extends 75 feet to the mill, and will move 600 bushels an hour, making a great saving in labor. The stub track built by the O. C. R. R. for this business convenience is over 500 feet in length.

Sudden Death.

Rev. George C. King, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at East Weymouth, died very suddenly at 10.30 o'clock this morning, at the parsonage, aged 35 years. He leaves a wife and daughter. He retired last night not feeling well, but this morning when the doctor called he found him better. Shortly after 10 o'clock he began to grow worse, and before help could be summoned he passed away, the cause of death probably being heart difficulty.

C. A. BLANCHARD, Librarian.

July 6, 1888.

To the Editor of the Gazette and News:—

I should like to say a few words in regard to the case of Russell B. Pratt (Per Proce. Ami.) vs. Inhabitants of Weymouth, which has just been decided by the Supreme Court in favor of the town. It has been a very expensive suit and it is now reported about town that the selectmen were obliged to defend it, as every effort had been made to effect a settlement. Now I wish to say to the public that in no way shape or manner did the selectmen ever say one word to me about the accident. I was obliged to go to the courts and try to get what seems to me common humanity ought to have prompted them to grant in the first place. GEO. W. PRATT.

East Weymouth, June 27, 1888.

Funeral Service.

The funeral services over the remains of Mrs. John M. Walsh took place Monday afternoon, at Trinity Episcopal church, Rev. Mr. Hyde, rector, officiating, and many relatives and friends being present, among these being Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Humphrey, her daughter and son-in-law, who reached here Sunday. The floral tributes at the funeral were numerous and elegant, comprising a large pillow of white pinks, surrounded by roses and ivy leaves and bearing the word "Mother," in purple immortelles; pillow inscribed "Grandma"; anchor inscribed "Mother"; harp with broken string, with word "Wife" at the base; anchor on standard; small pillow; two baskets; numerous bouquets.

Loyal Legion.

On Saturday last the Loyal Temperance Legion, Co. H., of East Weymouth, celebrated their third anniversary in Temple of Honor hall, upwards of two hundred being present. A procession was formed in front of Reform Club hall, and the children with flags and banners, headed by drummer Warner Orcutt, marched around Jackson square, to the Temple hall, presenting a very pleasing sight. At the hall a short entertainment was given as follows:—Recitations by Fred Burrell, Clara Gardner, Jennie Reed, Josie Tirrell, Annie Bearce; vocal duett, Ada Tirrell, Lillian French; piano duett, Ada and Sadie White; each number being well rendered. Words of good cheer were spoken by Mrs. Z. L. Bicknell and Mr. Walter Sayward, after which the children marched to the upper hall, where a bountiful supply of cake, ice cream and bananas was served, to which all did justice. It will be a remembered day to all.

In order that the people of Weymouth may know who and what we are as a society, we give a report as read by Willie Raymond Hayden, Sec'y of the Legion:—

The Loyal Temperance Legion was organized June 16, 1885, Mrs. Henry B. Raymond, leader, Mrs. Wm. Hayden, Elizabeth Carlton, assistants. Our first meeting was held in Reform Club hall, with fifteen members. At the end of the first year we numbered 40 members, at the end of the 2d 100, and to day 188. The average attendance has been 47. Our meetings are opened with scripture reading and prayer; the triple pledge is repeated by the Legion; we have temperance instruction by our leader, and singing by the children. An entertainment is furnished by a committee appointed at each meeting. At nearly every meeting we have had either cards or leaflets distributed. The total number of cards distributed since we organized is two thousand, and about two hundred and fifty leaflets. Cards were given us by our kind mothers, the W. C. T. U., and a portion of our leaflets by our sisters, the Y. W. C. T. U., all of which has been gladly received by us. Some of our cards have gladdened sick rooms. During the three years of our organization we have lost one member, Abbie Thaxter Bates, who died March 13, and today is numbered with the Legion above. As this is the last meeting of the year, let us take for our motto, the motto of our mothers, "For God and Home and Native Land."

Rush of Travel.

The closing of schools in city and country for the summer vacation has given a great impetus to travel shoreward over the lines of the O. C. R. R., and the trains from the city, though enlarged in number of cars, are packed with passengers in quest of quiet spots along the South Shore, or more distant Cape Cod and the Vineyard, where they may pleasantly pass the summer days.

Subscriptions.

In the list of subscriptions of Weymouth residents collected by the Quincy branch of the Irish National League for the parliamentary fund, Daniel O' Connor, of South Weymouth, obtained $11 from the Ladies' Land League of that village, and $1 each from 39 residents. Michael Conty, of East Weymouth, obtained $50 from residents of that village who gave $1 each.

Shore Party.

A party of 30 residents, including the families of John Connors, J. Rafferty, Wm. Rooney, M. Shea and J. Quinn made an excursion to the Neck on the Fourth, and camping in the Grove near the bridge, enjoyed a clam bake and other refreshments provided for the occasion, passing the day in very pleasant manner.

Fire.

An alarm of fire yesterday morning was caused by a slight fire in the house on Broad street occupied by Mrs. Partridge, but it was soon extinguished. The family were making ready to move to Dr. A. G. Nye's house on Richmond street, at the time. The fire was caused by a fire cracker exploding on the roof. The hose company rallied at once and put a stream on in short time, while the steamer was run out and though not required for service the opportunity was improved for a test of the steamer's condition, which was found to be all right.

The old school house on Pleasant street is being moved to a lot of land near the NEWS office, where it will be altered by having the roof raised so that the upper part can be finished, when it will be occupied by W. F. Merchant, who will open a restaurant.

The first open air concert of the season was given in Jackson square last Monday evening, by the Weymouth Band, and was an exceptionally fine one, each number being loudly applauded by the large gathering of people, in carriages and on foot, who filled the square. East Weymouth can well feel proud of her band, for it is one of the best in the state.

Mr. Ezra F. Tirrell, who has been at Chattanooga, Tenn., for the past few weeks, returned home last Monday, via Savannah, having experienced a very rough voyage, and being sick nearly all the way. His health, since he has been gone, has not been very good, and he has lost 25 pounds in flesh, which he attributes to the drinking water there, which is very poor. He left his wife and daughter out there, they intending to return in two or three weeks.

The fourth was passed very quietly here, the boys being out a little while the night before with a few crackers, but during the day everything was almost as quiet as Sunday. The day was as pleasant as could be asked for, business of all kinds was suspended, and many took advantage of the cheap railroad fares and went to the beach, every train being loaded. In the evening many went to King Oak Hill, where there was speeches, music, fireworks, etc.

The personel of the new East Weymouth base ball club is J. Delaney, c., S. B. Totman, p., P. H. Cullen, s. s., T. Hyland, 1b., W. Clark, 2b., J. Quinlan, 3b., E. Powers, l. f., W. Fennell, c. f., E. Lonergan, r. f. This is a strong team and some good games may be expected this summer. They will play their first game Saturday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock with the Cambridge base ball club.

Lawn Tennis Tournament.

The second annual tournament of the Harlequin Lawn Tennis Club was held last Wednesday at the court of Miss M. Abbie Rogers, on Middle street, and was a grand success. Two prizes were offered, a tambourine hand mirror for the lady, which was awarded to Miss Jennie Thayer, and a tennis racket with a thermometer for a handle, to Winthrop Bates, they being the strongest couple. Following is the summary: 1st set—Miss Jennie Thayer, Winthrop Bates, 6; Miss Gertrude Strickler, J. W. Vinal, 4. 2d set—Miss M. Abbie Rogers, A. E. Joy, 6; Miss Clara P. Denton, W. H. Pratt, 2. 3d set—Mrs. Arthur Cuningham, Arthur Cuningham, 6; Miss Mabel Cuningham, Edward McGrath, 4. 4th set—Miss Edith W. Clapp, Geo. B. Rolf, 6; Miss Hattie Barnes, Harry Bates, 2. Then came the play off, which was as follows:—Miss Jennie Thayer, Winthrop Bates, 6, vs. Miss M. Abbie Rogers, A. E. Joy, 1; Mrs. Arthur Cuningham, Arthur Cuningham, 6, vs. Miss Edith W. Clapp, Geo. B. Rolf, 1; the final being Miss Jennie Thayer, Winthrop Bates, 6, vs. Mrs. Arthur Cuningham, Arthur Cuningham, 2. After the games were over and the winners congratulated and presented with prizes, refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. It was a very enjoyable affair and will be long remembered by those participating. The next regular meeting will be held this evening, with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Cuningham.

LOVELL'S CORNER.

The members of the Woman's Home Mission society, which was recently organized by Mrs. Alger, hold their first meeting this evening.

Rev. Mr. Brown of Cohasset, will preach here next Sunday afternoon in exchange with Rev. S. F. Chase.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to extend through the GAZETTE our sincere thanks to the many friends and relatives for their acts of kindness, to Rev. Mr. Axtell for his comforting words of condolence, to those who expressed their sympathy by giving beautiful floral tributes, also for the assistance of the singers and pall bearers. Their kindness will ever be remembered by Mr. L. D. NORTH and daughter, Mrs. F. W. Ingham.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. Albert Tirrell and family desire to express their most sincere and heartfelt thanks to those angels of mercy who lent such timely aid in the recent accident. Rest assured that by us the acts can never be forgotten, and should we fail to appreciate this kindness there was One who guided it all and He will reward you.

A young lady of seventeen summers, highly educated, refined, and of prepossessing appearance, desires to form the acquaintance of some nice young man, whom she would advise, if troubled with dyspepsia, to use that great blood purifier, Sulphur Bitters.

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

Celebration.

The "Glorious Fourth" was celebrated on the summit of King Oak Hill by the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union, of North Weymouth, in fitting manner, there being a large number of people present from all parts of the town. At 8 o'clock Rev. F. H. Palmer with a few remarks introduced Gilman C. Fisher, Esq., Sup't of Schools, who said this was his maiden Fourth of July speech. He recently saw an article in the GAZETTE concerning the town pump, and he supposed that the young men intended to get together in the early morning and remove it bodily, but he was mistaken; it was the young ladies who were trying to raise enough money to place a fountain there, for which object he would here subscribe $5, and if every one present would give according to their means enough would be raised to erect the largest and best fountain in town.

Rev. E. T. Pitts was then introduced and spoke some fifteen minutes upon the many advantages of our land, and saying that its greatest curse was rum. Mr. Palmer then announced that the young ladies had refreshments for sale, and while those present were patronizing the tables a good display of fireworks was made, and a detachment of the Weymouth Band gave a number of musical selections. On the whole it was a very successful affair, reflecting credit upon the young misses of North Weymouth for their tact and enterprise.

Letters remaining in the North Weymouth Post Office, for the month ending June 30, 1888:—James Aneen, John Brine, Geo. Cook, W. W. Cole, Vivian K. Cummings, Berge Anderson Eide, Geo. Kinning, Geo. W. Lake, Daniel Murphy, Mary Murphy, Martin McCormick, Chas. McDonald, Martin Morton, Henry Silver, Mrs. Sarah M. Tailor. Postals:—Geo. C. Cushing, Mrs. H. Moulton, John J. Scanlan.

J. R. ORCUTT, P. M.

John Binney has been granted a pension.

Regattas.

The second regatta this season of the Monatiquot Yacht Club was sailed last Saturday afternoon over a course from Fort Point around Hull buoy, nine miles, for the first class, the second class course being two miles shorter. The line was crossed about 3 o'clock, the Folly and Posy being in the first class. The Folly maintained the lead to the return, coming in two minutes ahead, but by allowance the Posy took the race.

The Diadem was the winner in the second class sloops, and in the cat-boats the Tartar took the first place, Flora Lee the second and Maud the third. A strong breeze prevailed during the race and the regatta ended about 5 p. m., when the judges, Henry Gardner, A. W. Blanchard and A. L. Spinney, who were stationed on the steamer Bessie B., announced the summary, as follows:

Name and owner,	Length. Ft. in.	Actual time. h. m. s.	Cor. time h. m. s.
Posy, R. G. Hunt,	22 03	1 43 17	1 11 29
Folly, J. F. Sheppard,	26 08	1 41 32	1 14 14
Tartar, J. B. Forsyth,	19 06	1 35 26	1 05 37
Flora Lee, E. B. Glover,	17 05	1 33 33	1 06 08
Maud, H. A. Nash, Jr.	19 02	1 37 34	1 09 46
Hester, P. R. Blackmar,	19 11	1 37 31	1 10 33
Diadem, L. Hayward,	18 02	1 31 17	1 02 22

In the regatta of the Quincy Yacht Club last Monday the Folly, Posy and Diadem of the Monatiquot Club were entered, the Diadem being the only one in her class. The Folly finished 10 minutes ahead of the Posy, but was protested by a claim that the wrong buoy was rounded by the Folly.

In a race of the Quincy club on Friday last, the Posy was winner in the first class.

Fort Point.

The young ladies in the office of M. C. Dizer & Co. have had a week's outing at the Puritan Cottage, the proprietor, Mr. Matthew Macauley, generously donating its use to the party. The party received calls from friends, and with boating and fishing and bathing the time was passed most enjoyably.

Orin Pool, of Lovell's Corner and C. Stetson and H. Faulkner, of East Weymouth, with their families, have camped on the shore at the Point, under capacious tents, fitted with every convenience for comfort, one of the tents having a board floor and carpet.

Mr. Wm. Morrison and family, of Braintree, are at the Hender cottage for a month.

Mrs. Charles Springer of Chicago, is at the B. J. Loring cottage for the season.

Harrington Smith and family are stopping at Bay View cottage.

One of the "B. T. H. A. G. T. Club" writes from Fort Point that they arrived at Monatiquot Cottage Saturday week, encountering the severe tempest that evening, and needing a coal fire Sunday, but the party was delighted with the place and its surroundings of beautiful scenery and regretted the brevity of their stay. They found agreeable neighbors in a party from Chicago who are occupying the Loring cottage for the season. The writer speaks of the conveniences for obtaining supplies for the table at the Point, Messrs. Bartlett and Orcutt running teams daily, in addition to the ice men, fish pedlers and bakers. The "photographer has been on hand and immortalized the party. We are obliged from limited space to condense the letter.

D. M. Kidder, Elmer Kidder and Jas. Newcomb, are in New Hampshire this week.

A house on Shaw street owned by W. T. Shaw and occupied by A. J. Shaw and a Mrs. Ryan, was set on fire Tuesday morning by fire crackers, the roof being ablaze when discovered. It was extinguished by carpenters working near by without giving an alarm.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin H. White and daughter left home yesterday to visit their friends in Newmarket, N. H.

Mrs. Caleb Lothrop and family, of South Easton are occupying the Ford cottage, at Great Hill beach, this week. Ellis R. Holbrook and family from Chesset, spent the Fourth with them.

A continual rush is being made to the ice cream parlors of Mrs. John Battles. Everybody goes there to be refreshed and enjoy a luscious cream.

Our Glorious Fourth.

Anniversary of Independence was celebrated in Old Spain as usual at 12.15 a. m., the noise of cannon, guns, horns, fire crackers and drums making the welkin ring. The boys went in for a good time and had it, as it was right they should. At four o'clock the bell on the church commenced to ring, and the racket continued for an hour and at intervals through the day. Work in all the factories was suspended and people generally seemed to observe the day in a proper manner. A party from Quincy held a picnic at Lovell's grove, and sobriety characterized the day. At dusk a splendid show of fireworks was made by several residents of the village. Everything seemed to pass off all right, no accidents or disturbances being reported. M.

Six persons, four on profession and two by letter, were received into membership of Pilgrim church last Sunday.

Mr. W. Bicknell, son of H. T. Bicknell, has passed the entrance examinations for Harvard Medical School.

"Esther's Mission," will be the subject of Rev. Mr. Eaton's sermon in the Universalist church next Sunday afternoon.

Class Hymn.

The following class hymn was written for the South High graduation exercises by Grace G. Hunt.

In our first school days busy cheer,
Far distant seemed the day
When we should stand before you here,
Our farewell words to say.
But years have one by one passed on,
No more as classmates true,
Shall we walk together side by side,
Through the future's pathway new.

Dear schoolmates, whom we leave behind,
When you our places claim,
Work on with willing heart and mind,
With pure and steadfast aim.
For all too soon the time will come,
When you as we must say,
"Our pleasant schooldays now are o'er,
This is the parting day."

We know whate'er our work shall be,
Through till all victory's won
Then we may labor faithfully
Till all our tasks are done.
At what the future brings to us,
Our hearts shall ne'er repine,
While memory oft shall take us back
To the days of "auld lang syne."

To-Night and To-Morrow Night,

And each day and night during this week you can get at F. H. Morgan's, druggist, Kemp's Balsam, for the Throat and Lungs, acknowledged to be the most successful remedy ever sold for the cure of Coughs, Croup, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Asthma and Consumption. Get a bottle to-day and keep it always in the house, so you can check your cold at once. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Sample bottles free

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

The annual exhibition and graduating exercises of the Bates Grammar school took place at the Union church vestry Friday afternoon in the presence of a large audience of friends. The exercises were remarkably good and many of the participants gave promise of high attainments in the future, while much that was said and done on this occasion was extremely creditable. We give the programme entire.

The Glorious Fourth had a very quiet celebration in this village. The blowing of horns by the small boy, the smell of powder and the general holiday appearance of everybody and everything however, told more than any special demonstration could have done of the hold this day has upon the American people. It takes the lead in the calendar of holidays and will continue thus as long as patriotic pride lives in our country. In the evening Mr. J. A. Fogg and Mr. Louis A. Cook had some fine pyrotechnic displays.

Now if we could have our streets generally sprinkled all through the summer everybody would be happy and the dust nuisance could be borrowed by some village farther off.

The Old Colony Railroad Company has agreed to pay the sum of one hundred dollars to the Improvement Association if an electric light is placed in the depot yard near the crossing. Such a light would be of great advantage both to the company and its patrons, and there is little doubt but what it will be in place early in the fall. The soliciting committee has met with unexpected encouragement, and the total amount of the subscriptions has reached a good figure. We are almost sure to have ten electric lights before winter.

The absence of any noticeable elocutionary power as a general thing among the boys and girls who come before the public at school exhibitions and Sunday school concerts is evidence enough to an observing mind that there is something lacking in the voice training of pupils in our public schools. If there is one thing that is appreciated by an audience on such occasions it is to hear a recitation roll out of the speaker's mouth clearly and forcibly, with proper attention to the sense of the piece. To-day this is more the exception than the rule. It is much easier to be a good reader than a good singer, and nearly every boy and girl could be taught to speak loud and distinctly, so that whenever, in after years, they addressed an audience on any public occasion they could at least be favored with the criticism that all their sentences were heard. Voice training is a physical advantage, and a proper amount would be of more value in many ways than much with which the child's mind is crowded. Make the pupil strong in the rudiments while cultivating the mind as far as possible with the classics and treatises of the higher education. We do not underrate the latter, but at the same time cannot help drawing attention to some of the things that count highly when the school life is over, and one has to deal with practical, every-day life.

Miss Grace Joy was highly complimented by Supt. Fisher and others for her rendering of the "Sioux Chief's Daughter" at the Bates school exhibition last Friday. Miss Joy is a very young girl, but already shows decided dramatic ability, which with proper training and study would make her an excellent actress, while at present she is a reader of growing reputation.

Estes & Willis have had a constantly increasing trade each week since they opened their grocery store near the depot. Competition, it is said, is the life of trade, and this new firm will, by keeping only first-class goods, secure a good patronage in the long run, according to present indications.

The well-known dry goods house of Timothy Smith in Independence square is always a desirable place to purchase everything in that line, especially in hot weather when a trip to the city can be avoided. The clerks are polite and capable, and often find busy employment.

Mr. E. H. Stetson, of the firm of Stetson & Heald, returned Saturday from a two month's business trip through the West.

Mr. C. A. Hunt has taken a cottage at Nantasket, where he will remain for the summer, coming to South Weymouth Saturday each week and remaining over Sunday.

Independence square is being much improved by the building-up process on one side and the tearing-down process on the other.

HENRY.

Picnic.

A grand union picnic of Division 6, A. O. H. of this town, and the Y. M. C. L. A. of Abington, was held at the fair grounds, South Weymouth, last Tuesday, a variety of sports being provided for the entertainment of the party. The King Phillip base ball club of Rockland, and the Lovell's Corners, of this town, played a match game, which was won by the former; score, 6—5. In the one mile bicycle race, Senter of Campello won the gold medal, and Nevin of Brockton the silver medal. Tobin won the half-mile race and $5 prize, Guertin $3. Hickey obtained the first prize, $2, in the boys' quarter-mile run, and Donohue second money, $1. Jesse Alton band gave an open-air concert, and Dunbar's band furnished music for dancing in the hall.

The following is the score of the base ball game, which was close and exciting:—

Poor but Honest.

Charlie Sullivan is a poor honest Irish lad, who, while walking down Washington street, found a wallet containing checks and money to the value of several hundred dollars. Although almost destitute, he returned it to its owners, Messrs. A. P. Ordway & Co., proprietors of Sulphur Bitters, who gave him a liberal reward, and also gave him six bottles of Sulphur Bitters for his mother, who had been a terrible sufferer with rheumatism, and who returned many blessings after being cured by their use.—Weekly World.

Interested People.

Advertising a patent medicine in the peculiar way in which the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam, for Coughs and Colds, does it, is indeed wonderful. He authorizes F. H. Morgan, druggist, to give those who call for it a sample bottle free, that they may try it before purchasing. The Large Bottles are 50c and $1.00. We certainly would advise a trial. It may save you from consumption.

MANUFACTURED BY
MONUMENTAL BRONZE COMPANY,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Read the following Certificates of Recommendation.

[Certificate of Prof. S. P. Sharples, Assayer of Metals for the State of Mass.]

I consider the White Bronze Monuments practically indestructible. They will not blacken or become dingy with age; moss will not adhere or grow upon their surface as upon marble, and the color will remain unchangeable while the monuments endure.

State Assayer of Metals of Mass., 114 State St.

[300 Years Without Change—Certificate of A. Cortepassi, the well known artist and sculptor of Cincinnati, Ohio, formerly of Florence, Italy.]

To whom it may concern:—This certifies that I have seen the statue of Popparoni, which was cast from zinc and erected in the city of Lucca, Italy, (according to the records) over three hundred years ago, and has stood constant exposure to the elements since. No sign of corrosion or change of color has taken place and to all appearance it is as beautiful as when first erected.

A. CORTEPASSI.
Feb. 21, 1876. 238 W. Fifth St., Cincinnati, O.

[Prof. Duffield, Ph. D., M. D.]

To the public:—There is no question in my mind of the durability of the White Bronze Monument. Refined zinc, when cast alone and in its pure state, and not placed in contact with silver, platinum, copper, etc., is indestructible from the elements, outlasting the best granites without the discoloration that marble always shows after a few years' exposure. No other material is so well fitted to withstand the atmospheric changes. Judging from a scientific and chemical standpoint, it is my opinion that these monuments will last thousands of years.

S. P. DUFFIELD, Ph. D., M. D.

The undersigned having received the agency for these justly celebrated Monuments, would respectfully invite all wishing to erect an enduring and suitable MEMORIAL to their departed friends, to examine the White Bronze Monuments, the most beautiful, durable and the cheapest. The best chemists and scientists in the country testify to its superiority over marble or granite. Reference is made to the many testimonials published in circulars and pamphlets, which will be sent on application to the Agent, who will also furnish designs and show samples of the work and prices.

I consider the White Bronze Monuments practical-cinnati, Ohio, formerly of Florence, Italy.]

To whom it may concern:—This certifies that I have seen the statue of Popparoni, which was cast from zinc and erected in the city of Lucca, Italy, (according to the records) over three hundred years ago, and has stood constant exposure to the elements since. No sign of corrosion or change of color has taken place and to all appearance it is as beautiful as when first erected. A. CORTEPASSI.

To the public:—There is no question in my mind of he durability of the White Bronze Monument. Re-ned zinc, when cast alone and in its pure state, and ot placed in contact with silver, platinum, copper,
tc., is indestructible from the elements, outlasting
he best granites without the discoloration that mar-
le always shows after a few years' exposure. No ther material is so well fitted to withstand the atmospheric changes. Judging from a scientific and hemical standpoint, it is my opinion that these monuments will last thousands of years.

16 CENT PANT STRETCHER

16-CENT PANT STRETCHER,
Is positively the BEST invention ever known for taking Wrinkles out of Pantaloons, and shaping the bottoms of the same to fit nicely over the shoe.

Pantaloons should always be suspended as shown in cut when not in use. Even those in daily wear should be thus suspended through the night.

HOW TO APPLY THE STRETCHER.

Take the front bottom part of the pants in the left hand, taking the pointed end of the stretcher in the right hand, insert the wood part up the back of the leg about three-quarters of an inch, then spring the pin point into the front about half an inch from the edge. Pantaloons that are badly wrinkled or bagged at the knee should be dampened. A good way to do this is to hang them out by the stretcher in the evening, or on a damp day.

WEYMOUTH MATTERS.

Weymouth Historical Society.

A meeting of the society was held at Tufts Library Wednesday evening, June 20, President Loud in the chair. The following memorial and resolutions upon the death of Mr. Gilbert Nash, late secretary of the society, were adopted:—

The members of the Weymouth Historical Society have been called upon to mourn the death of their esteemed associate, Mr. Gilbert Nash, late secretary of this society, who died at his residence in East Braintree, April 13, 1888.

Born of an old Weymouth family, educated in the public schools of the town and interested in literary pursuits we find him devoting his leisure moments to the study of local history and genealogy. He was one of the founders and active promoters of this society, having held the office of Recording Secretary from the date of its organization until his death, a period of nine years.

We can never forget the regularity of his attendance upon all the meetings of the society, he having been absent therefrom but two or three times until the winter of 1887–8, when he was compelled on account of illness to remain at home; neither can we forget the patience or perseverance with which he devoted himself to the accomplishment of any task assigned to him. And especially do we recall his laborious and painstaking efforts in transcribing from the early record books of this town.

Of the historical works compiled by him those best known are the "Journal of General Solomon Lovell kept during the Penobscot Expedition 1779 with a sketch of his life," and a "Sketch of the Town of Weymouth" both of which were published under the auspices of this society. He also contributed the leading article on Weymouth which appeared in the History of Norfolk County. A genealogical history of the family of Humphreys of Dorchester and Weymouth was compiled by him, also a history of the Nash family as yet unpublished to the preparation of which he devoted a great deal of time and attention. In addition to these historical and genealogical productions he wrote a large number of smaller articles of a kindred character which have appeared in various papers and magazines.

He was gifted also with the poetical temperament and wrote many short lyrics and anniversary hymns, always in a strain of pure and lofty sentiment, while his published volume entitled "Bay Leaves" has been spoken of as having considerable literary merit.

As a historian he was indefatigable and painstaking in the investigation of every subject which engaged his attention and displayed in its treatment rare accuracy of knowledge, recognized soundness of judgment and decided independence of thought and expression. He will always hold a high place of respect and honor in the memory of those who have known him best in connection with this Society and in the daily walk of life, for the sterling manhood that always characterized him.

In token, therefore, of our sense of the great loss we have sustained in the death of our late associate be it

Resolved, that we consider it not only a sad privilege but also a bounden duty to place upon record our grateful appreciation of the long and efficient services of Mr. Nash, both as an active member and as a valued officer of this Society, whose interests were largely promoted by his zeal in bringing it to the favorable notice of other organizations of a similar character, and by his patience and diligence in collecting and preserving a great amount of valuable information relating to the history of Weymouth and to the genealogy of many of its oldest families.

Resolved that while this Society mourns the loss of one of its honored members the community in which he lived has occasion to deplore the death of an esteemed and upright citizen, who was active in many departments of public service to which he gave his best efforts and his untiring support.

Resolved that we hereby express our heartfelt sympathy with his bereaved partner and the other relatives of our departed friend and cause to be entered upon our records a copy of this memorial notice and these resolutions.

Samuel W. Reed was chosen Recording and Corresponding Secretary to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Nash and Dr. C. C. Tower was chosen to fill a vacancy in the committee on nominations. A large number of donations were reported.

Lecture to Young Women.

The theme of Rev. E. T. Pitts' lecture in the Union church Sunday evening of last week, to young women, was the first chapter of Genesis, twenty-seventh verse: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

According to this passage, he said, women have as good right to be in this world as men, and judging from their endowments they are entitled to certain inalienable rights and privileges. As to influence, it is an open question whether on the whole that of woman is not superior to that of the so-called stronger sex. However it may be, it is evident that the gentler sex has a place in the world, and that she fills it well. Like her companion man, certain responsibilities devolve upon her, and she needs to feel their full force.

Let me in the first place offer a few words of congratulation. I congratulate you, my young friends, that you were born in this age of the world, which is the most fortunate age for your sex. If you had lived in the earlier ages fate would have probably made you the slave of some man, or worse, his plaything. You would have been intellectually an ignorant being, morally a degraded one. I congratulate you, also, on being born in a Christian land. If today you were living in some other land than this, your lot might be a hard one. Here is what a writer says of the awful condition of Eastern women. "If the abuse that the Moslems give their wives were given to one of our American dogs, the dog would pine away and die." I congratulate you again, on what your sex has accomplished in the history of the world. Some of the noblest and most useful characters in the Bible are women, as Deborah and Hannah, of the Old Testament. In the New Testament there are given, as examples of noble and influential women, Dorcas and Lydia and Priscilla and Phebe, and the women that were the friends of Christ.

Among women whose lives are recorded in profane history none is more remarkable than that of Zenobia, the famous Queen of Palmyra. Another woman whose name stands out as one of the most splendid in all history, was Isabella, Queen of Castile in Spain. Columbus had been ignominiously treated by potentates and priests and people, until he fell in with this woman. She, first of all, (putting to shame the men of that time) listened to him, approved of his project, and raised the money for him by pledging her jewels. One of the ablest monarchs that ever sat on any throne was Queen Elizabeth, of England. By many the greatest novelist of the present century is considered to be George Elliot. Mrs. Browning as a poet, is in many particulars unsurpassed. In music what name is better known than that of Jenny Lind? In philanthropy and religion women have been especially distinguished. The names of Florence Nightingale and Clara Barton are representative in that line.

I congratulate you still further, young women, on the bright prospect that is before your sex—the prospect of entering on wider fields of usefulness, and of attaining to loftier heights of achievement. I cannot see why women should not fill any position for which they have the inclination and capacity. Open the doors as wide for them as you can, it will still remain the fact that the most of them will esteem it their highest prerogative to make wives and mothers; but if any others hear the voice of God calling them into different fields, let us not hinder, but encourage them.

I congratulate you, further, on the influence of your sex. Woman's influence is not so ostentatious as that of man. It is silent, like the silent forces of nature, and as strong. It begins with the cradle. A mother's smile to the infant is heaven; her love is gospel, her word is law. The charm and attractiveness of social life lie almost altogether in what woman puts into it.

In business and state affairs woman's influence is often more potent than appears on the surface. It is said of Napoleon and Josephine that while he conquered kingdoms she conquered hearts. It is thought if he had been as wise in his field as she in hers, that he would not have ended his days a miserable exile, but a successful monarch to the last.

We have now held up before your sex the mirror of the past and present. We are glad you can see so much in it that is favorable to you, while you can justly congratulate yourselves on much that you are, and on much that you have done: still, if you would be truly wise, you will look about you and within you to see what remains for improvement. In a garden, if weeds be there, though the flowers may still be beautiful, yet the effect is marred and the cultivation cannot be so successfully carried on. Are there no weeds in the soil of young womanhood? Bear with me if I point out a few.

There is the weed of extreme fashionableness in dress. This weed is often of the most grotesque and extravagant appearance. I do not prate against the fashions when they are sensible and beautiful; I do not think there are many men but like to see their wives and sisters dressed becomingly and prettily. I am sure that every sensible man abhors the masculine style on the one hand, and every pure man the decollete on the other.

Another bad weed closely allied with the former is extravagance. This weed is large and gaudy. Some people seem to imagine themselves born into the world to spend all they can and to make all the show possible. Going beyond one's means to dress well is one of the curses of American womanhood.

Another noxious weed is the idleness prevalent among many fashionable young women. You will see young ladies of this stamp cultivating the parlor and the ball room, while their mothers cultivate the kitchen. There is, too, the weed of unbecoming behavior, exemplified by forward and flirting young women. That such conduct is contemptible and degrading hardly calls for statement. There is one other weed of a mis-shapen kind, which may be called false education. In some circles no common sense is exercised in the education of girls. It is thought if they have a smattering of French and German, can play the piano, paint a little, and dance well enough for company purposes, that is all that is wanted. Home education, that which should be the foundation of every woman's training, is entirely neglected. Let domestic training go before the knowledge of books and polite accomplishments. I would not have a woman stop with the mere knowledge of household affairs. Let her cultivate her intellect. Young ladies should seek to know something beside small talk and gossip. The heart should also be cultivated. If this is done the last weed will have been pulled out. Keep your heart open toward God. He will cleanse it and fill it, and you will grow in every grace, unfold in every beauty, until you become "A perfect woman, nobly planned

To warn, to comfort, and command."

The American Institution of Instruction will hold a convention at Newport for five days, July 9 to 13, and noted educators in many departments will deliver lectures.

Valedictory

DELIVERED BY MISS SUSIE B. LITCHFIELD, AT THE GRADUATION EXERCISES OF THE NORTH HIGH SCHOOL.

Dear Friends:

To you who have watched our progress for the past four years, and who have gathered tonight to witness the last act in the drama of our school life, we bid farewell. Henceforth we shall be enrolled as members of the higher school of Life. During all the four years of our high school course, you have done us every kindness which lay in your power, and in coming here tonight you have shown the last token of good will possible to us as members of the high school. We thank you for all that you have done for us, and desire you to welcome us as fellow-workers with the same kindness and interest. In the name of the Class of '88, I now bid you Farewell!

Superintendent and Members of the School Committee:

Of you the Class of '88 takes its final leave. We cannot thank you in words for the many acts of kindness which you have shown us during all the years in which our school life has been connected with you. To you we owe all of the improvements which have made our school days so much pleasanter than those of many former classes. To you we owe much of the encouragement which has stimulated us to greater activity in the pursuit of our studies. Perhaps we have seemed not to appreciate your kindnesses, but I wish to assure you it is not so. The most effusive thanks seldom express the deepest gratitude. Now is the time when we must sever all connection between us as school-officers and pupils. Let us hope that though this bond be severed, we may still be united by the stronger chain of true friendship, which need never be parted in sunder. Farewell!

Dear Teachers:

For the last time let us call you by the familiar name. The last lesson has been recited and for the last time the Class of '88 has been called together under your leadership. Tonight we wish to express some of the deep and heartfelt gratitude we feel for all that you have done for us. O teachers! do not be discouraged in your noble work! Press onward and in the hereafter you will find your reward.

"Sow your seed at morn, and evening, pausing not to count the gain,
If your bread is on the waters, God will give it back again.
If the harvest you have toiled for, other hands than thine shall reap,
He'll repay you for your labor, who has bade you feed His sheep."
And now farewell.

Dear Schoolmates:

The hour is here when the good byes must be spoken. The Class of '88 takes a final leave of its fellow schoolmates. We go, but others come forward to fill the vacant places, and soon school life will glide along as smoothly as though no changes had come. Schoolmates, never be discouraged! There is a glorious future for those who are not overcome by failure, but press bravely on, with these words graven in their armor, "Beyond the Alps, Italy; the final reward will be sufficient to compensate for all your trials. The "end crowns the work." And now farewell, and the best wishes of the class of '88 will go with you on your future course.

Dear Classmates:

Now must the farewell be said, and all the old ties must be severed,
Which for so long a time have bound us and held us together.
Four long years have elapsed since together we started life's journey,
Four long years, which have brought us alike many pleasures and sorrows,
But tonight let us banish all memory of aught but the pleasant,
Leave the sorrow behind, and begin our new life with rejoicing.
"Let not him that putteth his hand to the plough look backward."
So let our griefs be forgotten and keep alive the fond memory
Of the sweet joys we have felt in the years we have studied together.
Hitherto have our pathways been side by side as we journeyed,
But tonight all is changed, and our ways are widely diverging.
Since we began our journey of school life together
One of our comrades has left us and joined the ranks of the angels, Joined the white robed throng, the throng of the ransomed and blessed.
Her dear Master called her, and we who are left can but utter
"It is the will of the Lord, and His mercy endureth forever."
Now, my beloved classmates, the farewell words must be spoken;
But I believe, that though tonight we are parting,
Though our ways henceforth are wider and wider diverging,
Some day again we shall stand as tonight proud and happy,
Older perhaps and worn with the conflicts and trials we have suffered,
Yet still the same loving hearts, united as now by true friendship.
Then in that final day, as together we stand at the Judgment,
O may the record show that none of our talents are wasted!
And may we all enter in to the mansions prepared for the faithful,
Enter into Life, by the side of the blessed Redeemer
He, the Great Teacher, whose guidance shall bring us at last to His Kingdom.

Literary Notes.

The July CENTURY contains another article in the series entitled "Dreams, Nightmares, and Somnambulism." A timely article is "Disease Germs and How to Combat them." It is accompanied by a frontispiece portrait of Pasteur, who has made disinfection and fermentation a longer study than hydrophobia, although it is with the latter that his name is more intimately associated in the public mind. George Kennan's Siberian paper in the July Century is called "The Steppes of the Irtish," and includes an account of a long ride in an out-of-the-way part of Siberia, among the Kirghis and the Tartars. The reunion at Gettysburg is remembered in the July Century by the publication of a short article descriptive of the reunions of the Blue and the Gray which have taken place within the last few years. A poem by an ex confederate soldier, entitled "The High Tide at Gettysburg," is printed in this number.

The July number of THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE is especially appropriate for summer reading. While fully maintaining its high literary character, preference is given to the lighter class of literature. A feature is a notable symposium discussion, by the leading American authors, of the Chace International Copyright Bill. Frederic G. Mather contributes an amusing and interesting description (fully illustrated) of New England Singing Schools as they flourished sixty or seventy years ago. Mrs. Charlotte Reeve Conover furnishes an illustrated paper on "Housekeeping" by the United States Government," describing the Veterans Home near Dayton, Ohio. Mrs. Admiral Dahlgren has a short story entitled "A Night's Adventure."

PRIZE STUDIES OF TORNADOES. The AMERICAN METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, desiring to direct the attention of students to tornadoes, in hopes that valuable results may be obtained, offers the following prizes: For the best original essay on tornadoes or description of a tornado, $200 will be given. For the second best, $50. And among those worthy of special mention $50 will be divided. The essays must be sent to either of the editors, Professor Harrington, Astronomical Observatory, Ann Arbor, Michigan, or A. Lawrence Rotch, Blue Hill Meteorological Observatory, Readville, Mass., U. S. A., before the first day of July, 1889. They must be signed by a nom de plume, and be accompanied by a sealed envelope addressed with same nom de plume and enclosing the real name and address of the author. Three independent and capable judges will be selected to award the prizes; and the papers receiving them will be the property of the Journal offering the prizes. A circular giving fuller particulars can be obtained by application to Professor Harrington.

HARPER'S for July has sixty fine engravings, in articles on the U. S. Academy at Annapolis, A Midsummer's Trip to the West Indies, The Great American Desert, The Grand Tour 1000 Years Ago, etc. An interesting paper on The Street Trees of Washington, a fifth article in the series, The Great West, a chapter of Maira's Revenge, with an exciting narrative of an elephant hunt in Africa, the old English song, Jockey to the Fair, with other poems, and timely topics in the Departments make up an excellent number.

ST. NICHOLAS for July has a large number of finely illustrated articles for young folks, the serials Two Little Confederates, and Drill, increasing in interest. Ringing in the Fourth is a thorough boy's story and Rodney's Ride is a stirring Revolutionary ballad. Dogs of Noted Americans is a charming illustrated sketch; Recollections of the Naval Academy is full of interest, and other articles of prose and verse add to the charms of this number.

THE TRIBUNE FOR 1888

GREATLY ENLARGED.

Much the Biggest of all the New York Weeklies.

Greater Variety of Contents, New Presses, New Type and New Appliances.

At the Head of the Republican Press.

The New York Weekly Tribune will be enlarged on or before the 1st of January, 1888, by the addition of from four to eight more pages of actual reading matter—an increase of size of great expense to the Tribune, but without expense to the subscriber.

A complete outfit of the new folding and inserting presses will be put into the Tribune's press-room in November and December; and the extra sheet will be folded into its place in the main sheet before it comes from the press. The enlarged Tribune will be the biggest and best of all the New York weeklies, and the new machinery will print it in an enlarged form, at the rate of seventy-two thousand copies per hour.

New Features and a great Variety of Contents will be added to THE TRIBUNE during the coming year. Readers will be given nearly a half more for their money than ever before.

Pensions for the old volunteers, especially Service Pensions, are being vigorously agitated in THE TRIBUNE; much space is given in every issue to this subject. Better Protection to Farmers under the tariff; the salvation of the country from the curse of intemperance; and the rescue of the national government from the hands of the rebel brigadiers; these, and all the other live issues of the day are receiving aggressive, earnest and loyal treatment in THE TRIBUNE.

THE TRIBUNE does not attempt to supersede the local State and county press. But, in the great Presidential contest now at hand, every thinking Republican, old soldier, farmer and temperance man, should have his local paper and THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—WEEKLY, $1 a year; extra copy with every five. SEMI-WEEKLY, $2 a year; extra copy with every five. DAILY, $8.50 per year. SUNDAY TRIBUNE, $1.50. New subscribers receive the paper until Jan. 1, 1889. Remit always by draft, check, express or postal money order or registered letter.

PREMIUMS—(1.) THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE'S History of the United States and Pocket Atlas of the World, 16mo., 254 pages, 50 maps, 50 colored diagrams; price, 40 cents; to subscribers, 20 cents; prettiest premium of the year—a fascinating running account of the history of the country, with a great variety of statistics and general information. (2.) Presidential Pocket Knife; subscribers' names and picture of his choice for President on the handle; send for descriptive circular; price at retail, $1.75; but given with THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE one year for the same money, $1.75; two other styles, for less money. (3) Popular Picture Gallery—6 fine large pictures, including the new officers of the G. A. R., Mr. Blaine, Senators Evarts and Hiscock, "Return of the Mayflower," "Christ Before Pilate," and "Children Writing to Santa Claus;" send for circular. (4.) Waltham Watch; expansion balance movement, stem winder, stem set, seven jewels, nickel case, thoroughly reliable and an excellent watch; with THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, 1 year, for $7.50. (5.) TRIBUNE'S "Book of Open Air Sports." (6.) Webster's "Unabridged Dictionary." (7.) Wood's "Household Medicine." These premiums cannot be described in full here. Send for circular.

THE TRIBUNE. New York.

QUICKSILVER.

Mining the Glittering Fluid from Cavernous Recesses.

Improved Methods Applied to an Unwholesome Occupation.

By the advice of the gatekeeper, says a correspondent of the San Jose (Cal.) Herald, we first went upon the "Hill." They told us that by the foot trail it was but a short distance, while by the wagon trail it was about three miles. After thirty minutes' up-hill work we reached what is called English Camp. This is a village of Cornish miners, and is a colony as distinct and separate from its surrounding neighbors as if it were planted upon an island in mid-ocean. They have their church, school, and public hall. How much they think of the two first this deponent saith not, but of their hall they are justly proud. The auditorium is of good size, and the stage is large enough to accommodate a good sized troupe. It is furnished with plenty of comfortable chairs, card tables, and a splendid piano. The walls are decorated with glowing lithographs of theatrical characters interspersed with a few noted politicians or statesmen. Here the miners meet of a Sunday or of an evening to while away the hours in reading, chatting, and playing various kinds of games.

From here we kept onward and upward to Spanish Camp, which, as its names indicates, is a similar camp to English Camp, except that its population is composed of Spaniards. We did not tarry here long enough to make much acquaintance with this village, but passed on by the old deserted Washington shaft to the American shaft, where we camped. The officer in charge of the American shaft took charge of us and showed us through his department. In this shaft the water is 400 feet deep and they keep a pump running day and night to keep it to that level. By the kindness of one of the employers those of the party that were not too timid of being under ground and wading in a little mud were favored with a trip of 500 feet through an old deserted tunnel.

The entire mountain is honeycombed with miles and miles of tunnels, cuts and crosscuts, there being upward of thirty miles of underground work.

There are the Washington, American, Buena Vista, St. Isabel and Randol shafts, all excepting the first being connected by tunnels and underground ways. Some of these shafts are over 2000 feet deep, and one of them is 500 feet below the sea level. In this the temperature is very high, the miners being compelled to work in almost a nude condition and to change shifts very often. Of late some of the shafts have been bothered with an accumulation of gases that are very unwholesome to the laborer, and it is feared that it will seriously impede the workings of the mines.

The mining of quicksilver is far from being as profitable as in years past, and it is only by the application of the most improved methods that it is made to pay at present prices. The reduction works are situated at the base of the hill and cover an immense area, and there is enough here to consume an entire day in sight-seeing. All the ore from the various shafts is wagoned to the brow of the hill and then let down to the works, by means of an inclined cable railway, right into the upper story of the building, thereby saving the hauling of it a long distance and also the elevating of it to the top of the works, where it begins its journey in the reduction process. The furnaces are run day and night, Sunday or Monday. Every hour they dump in a carload of ore at the top and take a load of rock from the bottom. A small stream of pure quicksilver is constantly running into an iron basin, from which it is ladled out into a scoop balanced for ninety pounds, from which it is funneled into an iron flask and tightly sealed.

The novice is very much surprised after viewing the white heat of the furnace and seeing the solid ore thrown in, to go to the base of the furnace and see the melted silver stream running out to find that he can hold his hand in the liquid without being burned. Again he is surprised to see his guide drop a heavy iron bolt into the liquid and find that the solid iron floats like cork. The most surprising thing to the stranger is to view all those shafts, pumping engines, hoisting works, hundreds of men employed in mining, teams and cars used in mining and transporting ore from the mines to the furnaces, acres of furnaces and miles of piping, and nothing to show for this great outlay of labor and capital but a tiny stream of bright silver that you would guess you could carry away in a bucket at night.

Swallows Take to a Ship.

A rather curious episode in natural history occurred the other day on board the French steamboat Abd-el-Kader during the passage from Marseilles to Algiers. Just as the vessel was about two hours out the sky became quite black with swallows. It was then about 6 o'clock in the evening. They alighted in thousands upon the sails ropes and yards of the Abd-el-Kader. After a perky survey of the deck from their eminences aloft they descended coolly on deck, hopped about among the sailors and passengers, and eventually found their way into the cabins fore and aft. The birds were evidently fatigued, after a long flight, and allowed themselves to be caught by the people of the ship, who gave them a welcome reception and provided them with food, which they enjoyed heartily. The little winged strangers remained all night on the vessel, and in the morning at 7 o'clock the head lookout bird no doubt sighted the Balearic Isles, for the whole flock made for land, after having spent a comfortable and refreshing night on board ship.—[London Telegraph.

Origin of a Popular Steak.

The Atlantic Constitution says that the name "porterhouse steak" originated in New York, where, 50 or more years ago, there were established a number of so-called "porterhouses"—places where porter and ale were sold. The tradition is that a beefsteak was called for at a butcher's shop, and, none being on hand, a cut from a roasting piece, about to be sent to a porterhouse, was given the customer. It proved so much superior to the ordinary steak that when he called next he asked for porterhouse steak, so the cut became choice and the name popular. Nor was it many years before the American invention had crossed the seas and became known under the same name in England.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

The Latest Fad of Fashion.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is troubled, and not without good cause. The fiat has gone forth that it will be fashionable this summer for "my lady's" pet poodle to match in color with "my lady's" pet costume. Now this is hard on the poodle, and it cannot be claimed that that canine's life has ever been an unruffled one, despite his diet of sugar plums and cream. But this last decree is the worst of all; it means that if "my lady" wears a toilet of blue, "Fido's" curly tail must be colored an azure tint, and the tips of his pretty ears made likewise to correspond. Next day, in all probability, pink is the color chosen, and poor "Fido" after a vigorous scrubbing, lathered with a certain kind of chemical soap, is reproduced, decorated a delicate conch-shell hue.—[Commercial Advertiser.

Points About Riding.

A writer in a St. Louis paper discourses thus on the subject of which side of her escort a lady equestrian should ride. In England the universal habit of turning to the left places the lady on the left but here we turn to the right and so the lady should be on the right. Why do not some independent American ladies set the fashion of sitting on the right side? The Princess of Wales always does so for some special reasons, and the Empress of Austria, one of the boldest and most graceful riders, as well as one of the most beautiful women in Europe has saddles made both ways, using them alternately. The same plan is adopted by noble ladies of England who hunt regularly in the season. However, accepting the present feminine seat as a thing not to be changed, the advantages in this country of riding on the one hand of the escort or on the other are so equally divided that the balance may incline to either side and a lady is always free to do about it as she pleases without exciting remark.

An Eccentricity of Toilet.

An eccentricity of toilet seen in Broadway, and heard, too, consists of cowbells worn by fashionable women. These curious adjuncts are shaped like old-fashioned tinkling bells which were suspended to one cow's neck in a herd, so that the beasts could be easily found when they strayed away in the woods, but they are smaller, being only about three inches long. The metal is brass with embellished surface, although in extreme cases of extravagance gold may be used. They dangle at the ends of chains from the wearer's belt, and the clappers tinkle against the inner sides with more or less noise according to the gait of the girl. If she treads hard and fast there is considerable ringing, but if she be an easy stepper, the sound is only an occasional clink, something like that of the brass heels once worn on shoes. It is to be hoped that these bells will not "ring out the old" notions of modesty, or "ring in the new" ones of audacity, but there probably is no danger of the style getting into vogue with other than those who desire to force attention to themselves.—[New York Sun.

Evolution of the Duster.

Dusters, from being the ugliest garments ever invented, have become things of beauty. They are unlined raglans or redingotes of thin silk, light and cool as thistledown. They are black, dark brown, dark red or pin-striped gray. Newer still, they are of changeable silk—blue and green, blue and red, etc. The latest shape also, and for traveling the most comfortable, is a circular held by a belt tape to the back and having long slits bound with velvet in front for the arms to pass through. Cloaks of striped or figured cloth are likewise made in this shape, with or without hoods. The longest journey can be effected with perfect comfort in the hottest weather in one of these silk dusters. Under it a cool, easily fitting gingham or sateen dress can be worn, as it will be quite viewless. With a pretty toque or bonnet, and handsome shoes and gloves, a woman is thus exceedingly well and appropriately dressed for traveling, while as much at her ease as it is possible to be. And it may always be borne in mind that useless weight or compression of garments greatly add to fatigue, and should be avoided so far as practicable by those desirous of preserving their freshness.—[New York Mercury.

New Industries for Women.

"Beats all how the women do swarm," said a rubicund old Chicago grandpa, laying down his newspaper and spectacles. And sure enough! You who see and sketch over so many different newspapers, just clip items of their "doings" for one week only, and see if grandpa isn't right, says the Chicago Herald. The persistent industry of women to whom labor is, first, a necessity through need, and then, maybe, a necessity through habit, is simply astonishing.

One industry mentioned in an Eastern paper might well be established in many Western cities, namely, the repairing of garments for women and girls. There is an army of busy women in offices, stores, school-rooms and homes of every city who literally find not a moment's time to put a fresh braid on a skirt, mend a pocket or press out wrinkles. So garments get hung away and neglected until one is loth to touch them again unless it is to sell them to the rag man. The dressmakers are too busy with new garments, besides one can't afford to pay new garment prices for repairing. A waist may need a new vest and button holes to put it in good wearing condition, but how shall a woman who goes to her work in town at 8 in the morning and returns at 7 or 8 in the evening do even this. What a convenience to call upon a mender and know that at a price which will make it worth while for both herself and you, the garment can be put in wearing order. It is easier for a business woman to buy a new dress and have it made than to fuss and bother with trying to fit up a partly worn one, but it is not good economy to give away, throw away or sell for a song a garment of good cloth which needs only a few hours' attention to make it "as good as new."

The Extreme Belle.

There are degrees in the fashionableness of fashionable women in New York. A comparatively small contingent of very wealthy and enterprising belles keep well ahead of the mass of modish women. Let us illustrate this point. Here come two girls dressed fashionably. Their hats are June shapes, their bodices are in the latest developments of the familiar jersey, their skirts are draped high behind, and take them all in all they are excellent exponents of approved garments. You will find them subsequently duplicated all through a promenade in Fifth avenue or Broadway. There is nothing singular or individual in their aspect. They are exhibits of the general tendency of fashion for the ensuing season. But look further along and you will find an essentially different figure, and it is that of what may be termed an extreme belle. She probably belongs to one of "our best families," and her allowance of clothes money is like that of an original designer, or of one who gets ideas fresh from the foreign centers of dressmaking. She has gained her distinction principally by being a pioneer in the revival of lace fringe as a toilet embellishment. The material has not been in vogue for a long time, but it is coming, and she is among the first to bring it in. Her shoulders and bosom are draped with it, and it extends down the front of her skirts. She has almost discarded the bustle, for the tournure is formed by the drapery of the skirt itself rather than by interior support. Readers of fashion news may have been puzzled of late to get at the truth regarding the bustle. They have seen statements repeatedly that the bustle has gone out of fashion, and at the same time they have seen it nearly as large as ever in actual use by fashionable women. The fact is that the doom of the bustle is pronounced, and for the exclusive kind of dress just described we are beginning to discard it altogether; but most of us wear it in a diminished size, and it will continue to wane until probably midsummer will see the last of it.—[Chicago Herald.

Fashion Notes.

Smocking is especially adapted to children's soft silk dresses.

Flounces are a feature of the latest importations of French dresses.

The growing fancy for amber ornaments is simple and inexpensive.

Foliage is extremely fashionable this season for hats, bonnets and dress trimmings.

Ashes of roses and similar shades of pinkish drab are in high favor for dressy wear.

Crepe lisse is a popular material for parasol covers. It is gathered or laid on in full folds.

The long Directoire coat worn over a plain skirt, is a favorite design for stylish street dresses.

Bandanna dresses are for the seaside; skirts of the bandanna silk and the over dress is of plain fabric.

Roman sash ribbons are used in trimming hats for young girls this season, with a full bow made on the side.

Fans this season are of every variety of color, shape and design. They may match the costume or contrast with it.

Gay summer gowns are made of scarlet India silk, with black figures in long, slender leaves, and trimmed with a profusion of black lace.

Dainty little sun bonnets for babies are made of pink or blue chambray and have an edging of valenciennes lace as a finish. These are worn with little dresses to match.

The straws of two colors, one for the crown and the other for the rim, are very stylish; green is the favorite color for the brim. In fact green and garnet green and straw color, and green and black are the combinations in which these straws are found.

Mrs. Langtry's Beautifying Unguent.

This remarkable story is from the New York World: Some time ago Mrs. Langtry found, to her great regret, when she decided to take up her residence in this country, that the American climate was far more trying to the complexion than the even temperature and moist atmosphere of England. The sudden changes of heat and cold, the furnace heated rooms, and the intense frigidity of the winter air dry up the skin and lay the ground-work for wrinkles. Then the keen, dry atmosphere keeps the nerves at a high tension all the while, and the pressure of the active life of this country increases the impulse toward nervousness. Before long she was horrified and disgusted to find that the smooth silkiness of her skin was becoming dry and shriveling into wrinkles about the eyes and mouth. She sat down promptly and wept, and after the due and natural overflow of feminine distress, dried her eyes and began to search for some unguent, some mollifying cream which would help her to withstand the ravages of an unfriendly air. Nostrum after nostrum was tried and thrown aside in disgust. While she was half-heartedly experimenting with a certain emollient, procured by grating cocoanut, twisting it tightly in a thin muslin cloth and rubbing the lace with a white cream, obtained in this way, she suddenly discovered what was meant to end her woes. A wandering American, who had lived many years in Persia, and had lately succumbed to the promptings of homesickness, was brought to call, and drifted into talk of the manners and customs of that Eastern land. Incidentally he mentioned that the Persian women ward off wrinkles by applying uncooked veal to their faces, and no sooner had he shut the front door than one of the footmen was on his way to the nearest meat-shop. There he procured several broad, thin strips of veal, and Mrs. Langtry, giving orders for "not at home" to every one, retired to her chamber, disposed herself on the lounge, and, with her countenance entirely covered with veal, allowed herself to be read to sleep by her maid. Ever since then, she has, throughout all her travels, gone through this performance twice a week, and finds her skin unfurrowed by any new insignia of the passing years.

In the Grasp of a Clam.

A fisherman, while on Plymouth beach, Mass., captured a large gray sea gull in a rather peculiar predicament. Firmly pinched upon the bird's bill was a sea clam about the size of the palm of a man's hand. The clam weighed enough to keep the head of the gull hanging downward, and thus effectively prevented any long flight, while it was evidently nearly exhausted in trying to escape from its strange captor. It is thought that the gull, seeing the clam's snout protruding, endeavored to seize the dainty morsel, and was in turn gripped by the hard shell of its intended victim.—[Chicago Herald.

Chinese Marriage Customs.

Among strange customs and laws that concern marriage in China may be mentioned the regulation that persons bearing the same name are not allowed to marry. So it comes that the children of two brothers cannot wed, while it is perfectly permissible for the children of two sisters or of a brother and sister to marry if so inclined. It is considered dishonorable for a man to marry a widow. This only happens among very poor classes; with men, because it costs less to marry a widow than a maiden, with the woman in order to receive a permanent means of support. A widow is spoken of as the "bearer of the white hem," as a white-edged garment is the sign of mourning. The usual color worn by a wife during the life of her husband is red. The period of mourning is twenty-seven months for a widow and nine months for a widower.

Widows often live with their husband's parents after his death, especially if they are well to do. It often happens that they commit suicide. In such cases the cause is usually not grief for the dead husband, but fear of want in the future. The most approved method of self-destruction is hanging. This act frequently takes place in public, and even in the presence of officials. Triumphal arches are sometimes erected to these "heroic widows."

If a bridegroom dies before the wedding the maiden is at liberty to be again betrothed, in case she does not prefer suicide. It is not easy, however, for the girl to find another wooer, for the death of the first is considered ominous. It happens sometimes, though rarely, that after the death of her betrothed the girl lives at the house of his parents the same as if she were actually his widow.

If the bride dies before marriage it is the young man's duty, if he does not wish to incur the enmity of her parents, to do honor to the shoes last worn by his betrothed, and from time to time burn incense before them. This he must do for a period of one or two years.—[Times-Democrat.

The Flies of India.

I watched a child about two and a half years enjoying a crust of bread. There were about it a swarm of flies, and I do not exaggerate when I say two or three dozen were on its face at one time in patches as big as a half a dollar, about its eyes and mouth. It would screw up its eyes when they threatened to go in. I thought some must have gone into its mouth with the bread. It did not seem at all annoyed. I saw a sleeping child on the street whose face was almost black with the insects. It smiled as if angels were whispering in its ears. I have seen men talking pleasantly together while a dozen flies would be promenading about their faces, apparently unnoticed by the owners of the faces. I asked a man how he could stand it. "Mashallah! They don't bother me," was his reply. This has made the fly bold, and he seems unable to understand what a foreigner means when he tries to drive him off. He has, too, remarkably prehensile claws, and keeps them keen and sharp when taking constitutional walks over European countenances. It was probably the knowledge of this quality which made these people pronounce it bad luck to drive them off. They found it best to educate the masses to bear the infliction, and so get used to it. Nearly all the religious and semi-religious prohibitions and usages of the people of the world probably had their origin in some material benefit. The cow was hard to raise in India. The cow was most necessary, so the wise priesthood made her sacred, and thus preserved her. Hog's flesh was subject to disease in Egypt and Syria, so the hog was made religiously unclean and infested with devils.

A Practical Electric Motor.

The trains on the electric railroad between Ansonia and Derby in Connecticut, run fifteen miles an hour. The custom is to make a mile in five minutes. The train which consists of a motor car and a passenger car carrying 30 persons, can be brought to a full stop in fifty feet. It is found that the cost of running is about one-half that of horse cars. There is a practical convenience in the fact that no time is lost in watering or changing horses. The electric steed does not fall down to distress the sympathetic passenger. The road carries freight as well as passengers and one of its benefits is a reduction of 25 per cent. in freights by the steam railroads with which it competes.—[Times-Democrat.

The First Book Published.

In the royal library at Windsor there is to be seen a work of great magnificence, a copy of the "Psalterieum," from the press of Faust & Schœffer, printed in 1457. It is the earliest book known with a date and is superbly bound in garter-blue velvet, and on the sides of its covers are the royal crown and cipher in solid gold, with embossed gold cornices and loops.—[Albany Argus.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

Marion Harland.

The celebrated authoress, so highly esteemed by the women of America, says on pages 103 and 445 of her popular work "Eve's Daughters; or, Common Sense for Maid, Wife and Mother:"

"For the aching back—should it be slow in recovering its normal strength—an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER is an excellent comforter, combining the sensation of the sustained pressure of a strong warm hand with certain tonic qualities developed in the wearing. It should be kept over the seat of uneasiness for several days—in obstinate cases, for perhaps a fortnight."

"For pain in the back wear an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER constantly, renewing as it wears off. This is an invaluable support when the weight on the small of the back becomes heavy and the aching incessant."

Ayer's Sarsaparilla Makes The Weak Strong.

Brockway Centre, Mich.,
May 18, 1888.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Lowell, Mass.,

Gentlemen:

Liver Complaint and Indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony, was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength enough to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and only the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I commenced the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an improvement in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much.

Mrs. JOSEPH LAKE.

We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence.

The Humming Bird.

There is no part of America where the humming bird is not found. Five species are found north of Texas, but the greater part of this family belong to Mexico, the West Indies and Central and South America. The humming bird is a very interesting study. Its flight is marvelous. It hardly ever alights, constantly hovers over flowers, its wings keeping up a hum, by their rapid vibration. The hover over flowers is designed not to smell their odor, nor to extract honey, as many persons erroneously suppose, but to capture insects. To this their bill and tongue are admirably adapted, being so long and slender, that they can reach into the deepest recesses of the flower, where the insects conceal themselves. The humming bird is the only bird that has teeth, having short rudimentary ones, one of the arguments of the evolutionists that all birds sprang from the reptiles, and originally had teeth.

If you can find a humming-bird nest it will well repay the trouble of hunting for it. It is constructed of such fibrous matter as may be at hand, as grass, stalks, cotton, etc., and lined with vegetable down. The outside of the nest is covered with moss, bark or lichens, so that it looks no more than a knot on the branch upon which it is built, while the whole is glued together with the saliva of the bird. The material is generally wound in part around the branch on which the nest is built, so that it is firm and difficult to detach. It is cup-shaped, and, in the smallest of them measures not more than half an inch across the widest part. In this tiny domicile two pure white eggs, very small, to be sure, but quite large in proportion to the size of the bird, are laid, and after ten days of patient sitting are hatched. The young are able to fly in a week, and another brood takes their place.—[National Educator.

A city clergyman in active service tells a good story of his early experiences as a schoolmaster in the lumber region of Maine. He is a very powerful man physically, and in his youthful days worked at cutting and rafting logs. He had saved enough from his earnings to pay for a year's schooling, and had returned to work, when he received a call to take charge of the district school in his native town. The school had a hard reputation, for on several previous seasons the big, rough boys had "fired out" several teachers. He agreed to take charge and maintain order in spite of the unpromising aspect. On the first morning of his appearance in the schoolhouse he was prepared for action, and he soon had it, for the big bully of the school stood up in his seat and exclaiming: "Come, boys, let's put him out!" stepped forward, only to be seized by the master, lifted bodily from the floor, and thrown through the window. This feat of courage and strength paralyzed the rest of the crowd, and the master was "boss" thenceforth.—[Boston Budget.

Scribner's Magazine in its series of railroad questions asks the following: "What is the fastest time made by a train?" The answer is, "92 miles in 93 minutes, one mile being made in 46 seconds, on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad." The New York Central's newspaper special train No. 11, on Aug. 8, 1886, drawn by engine 541, John W. Cool engineer, made the run between Syracuse and Buffalo, E street, a distance of 148 70-100 miles in 2 hours 24 seconds, which, for the distance, is claimed by the New York Central people to be a still better showing.

There is a great deal of contrariness in milk and cream and it takes the best appliances and the most skilled makers to keep the mischief from being paid frequently by the butter.

As the Years Go By.

Babes and their mothers' lullaby;
  Children at their daily play;
Maidens hearing their lovers sigh;
  Women brave in the world's way—
    Are of what we see and hear dear,
      As the years go by;
    Hear, dear,
      As the years go by.

How tender is time, withal,
  How kind to the good and true;
So gentle to me, withal,
  So gracious and sweet to you,
    This is what we see and hear, dear,
      As the years go by;
    Hear, dear,
      As the years go by.

Time's finger marks wrinkles are,
  Gray hairs its frost and decay,
A young heart has kept you far
  From age marks and frost away.
    It is what we see and hear, dear,
      As the years go by;
    Hear, dear,
      As the years go by.

Time from your face stays sadness,
  Leaving the bright sunshine in;
Kisses your eyes in gladness,
  Leaving the sweet lovelight in.
    Oh, this do we see and hear, dear,
      As the years go by;
    Hear, dear,
      As the years go by.

Sweet, let your birthdays come and go;
  Put your hand and love in mine.
You are young for loving so;
  I live because I am thine.
    All this do we see and know, dear,
      As the years go by;
    Know, dear,
      As the years go by.

—[Eugene Field.

Story of Old Man Finn.

I saw him last summer, working a third-class wire in a Western city. In reply to my inquiry, the chief operator informed me that Finn had been given employment the day before. I met the old boy on the stairs later in the day, and he said, in a weak voice, "Yes, I am back here again, what there is left of me. My drinking days are over, and I am about over too." He certainly looked bad, and I said to myself, "If consumption hasn't marked you for its own, your appearance belies you." My gaze went wandering away from him as he said sadly, "I can't telegraph very well any more. My hand shakes, and it is like sawing wood for me to work a wire—even a way wire." Then he left me and pursued his way up stairs to the operating room. Old man Finn is not more than 55 years of age, but he has burned the candle at both ends, and his nervous system is fatally wrecked. He has fallen into a decline of late years, and there remains for him nothing, I fear, but the bitter dregs of existence.

Away back in the sixties, when I was a mere lad, endeavoring to master the mysteries of telegraphy, Finn was in his prime. He was regarded as one of the finest telegraphers in the country, and at the time I first knew him he had just completed his 21st year. I doubt if many young men who have their way to make in the world, attain their majority under fairer auspices than he did. Intelligent, fine-looking, and the master of a profession which at that time was counted as one of the fine arts, almost, he had, apparently, an enviable future before him. Indeed, if I had been told in those dear old days that I would eventually reach what seemed in my boyish eyes a pinnacle of glory—such as he occupied—I should have been more surprised and pleased than I could be now over any prospect of future prosperity short of a tight hold on Paradise.

Somebody has recently written a poem in which two tramps figure. One inquires on meeting the other if there is no shade tree near at hand, and the second replies, "Yes, a little further down the road." The writer elaborates this idea and says we are all tramps looking for a shade tree. In his view it is always farther down the road, and but few of us ever reach it. The idea is well enough but the view is too pessimistic to please me. I believe, on the contrary, that we are rather like children straying through a house in which there are many rooms of exquisite loveliness, each more beautiful than the preceding one. Outside of the mansion we think we would be content if we could gain the hall, but once within we stray on and on, with thoughts intent upon the possibilities which lie beyond and little heeding the increasing beauty of our surroundings since we left the threshold. It is better that we should sometimes consider the point from which we started. The experiment is consoling at all events, and makes us philosophic and more contented with our social status. There are not many of us who have made the most of our opportunities, who cannot say with the Christian of old: "Oh, God, I have much to be thankful for."

Old man Finn has not so much to be thankful for as many, and that he has thrown away his opportunities is to my mind the chief reason therefor. In the curt vernacular of Americans, we often have the solution of a problem in one world. We hear of men in our own and other professions who have extraordinary abilities, kindly natures and many traits of character calculated to endear them to their acquaintances. We are told, however, that they are at present "down in the world," "utterly used up," &c., and when we inquire the cause, the answer comes with painful regularity in that direful monosyllable "Rum." Old man Finn's failure in life is also susceptible of explanation by the mention of that short sad word. I do not mean to preach a temperance sermon. In writing a sketch, however, of a man whom I have known and admired, and through whose kindly aid I was launched on a career which I hope I may be pardoned for considering a modestly useful one, it will be necessary to cite a few facts. These facts stand for themselves. If they preach anything I cannot help it.

How old memories come crowding upon me as I recall a lovely Sunday in June so far away that I instinctively look in the mirror to see "if the young boy is getting to be an old boy," and if "the hair is growing thin on the old boy's head!" I was early at the office that morning and was copying, with the idea of becoming an operator, the Morse alphabet from "Shaffner's Manual." So engrossed was I with my work, and the difficulty I experienced in fixing my chubby fingers around a pen so as to come within speaking distance of making the characters conform to those in Shaffner, that I did not notice that some one had entered. As I was desperately struggling with the letter "J," and inwardly bewailing my lack of expertness with the pen, a voice which startled me at first, but which I recognized at once as Finn's, said: "Hop down off that stool, sonny, and I'll make you the alphabet." I quickly surrendered the task to the more experienced fingers of the new comer, who had been looking over my shoulder, and I took my place on the messengers' bench. Presently Finn handed me a blank on which the alphabet, numerals and the punctuation points were given, and below them he had written in his own beautifully flowing chirography: "James Brady gave me his pretty black walnut box of quite small size." I bashfully expressed my thanks, but my heart was full enough of gratitude to have warranted something better than I said, had I been able to give utterance to my feelings. After answering a call and taking several messages, Finn started me out, saying as I went to deliver them, "You can practice on that sentence when you have learned to make the letters. It contains all the characters in the alphabet." I have given that little story about Brady and the small black walnut box to many aspiring youngsters since then. I wonder if any of them ever prized it as highly as I did when it first became a part of my knowledge, and I wonder, too, if among that small band of youths, some of whom became operators, while others failed in that to succeed afterward in other things, there is one who ever looked upon me as a half human, half divine personage, such as I regarded Finn. Probably not. But if there be one I am a much honored man, for nothing I can feel for a human being will ever excel my enthusiasm for my old telegraphic hero. Even though I have seen him often of late years under circumstances, which, for the moment, bereft him of all his old-time glory, still I go on remembering him—bright, dashing and handsome, and am thankful that I can. Old man Finn is the stern reality to nearly all who know him now, but to me he is an abstraction merely—a reality which goes out of my mind, giving place to my hero of yore the moment he leaves my presence.

Before he had gone far on his downward course I had become an operator, and worked by his side. I remember that in one of his exalted moods he took the color out of my existence for a month or more by a casual observation which I can never forget. Like many young operators, I fancied, long before I had perfected myself in my business, that I had solved the problem. I spoke in his presence to that effect one day, and he said, with that charming bluntness which is sometimes the result of an indulgence in stimulant:

"You will become a decent operator, but you are, of course, a frightful plug now." It cut me like a knife, but I needed the lesson. Years afterward, when I had progressed as far in the telegraphic art as nature intended I should ever go, I looked back on those earlier years and felt that Finn was right. I had finally been taught the bitter lesson which the great Newton confessed to have learned, and I felt that the little knowledge we acquire is valuable chiefly as teaching us the density of our ignorance.

Finn's character had a humorous vein in it withal. His ability as a "receiver" was the talk and wonder of the whole section in which he lived and wrought. He never broke, his work was accurate, and his penmanship marvelous. One day an operator, who copied press on the same wire, visited us, and asked George how he managed to receive report day after day without even breaking. Pointing to a primitive contrivance consisting of two lumbering sounders and a quick switch fully four feet square, situated on a shelf four feet away, and which did duty as a repeater for Worcester, Finn replied dryly: "I do sometimes lose a word, but I have to watch that rat trap over there for Worcester's break, and if a word slips me I can always spot it before it wiggles through that aged threshing machine."

The time came when Finn could no longer hold the responsible position of night report operator and he went West.

From that time out, until recently, he has returned to me at intervals varying from six months to two years. He plays the role of the "Friend of my Youth." He has invariably appeared without warning and uniformly in a state of impecuniosity. Sometimes he hailed from a New England town where he had secured a month's "subbing," again he came from some obscure village on a branch of the Erie railroad where he had been buried a year or two; anon he spoke of having just returned from Wyoming Territory or of having last worked in Texas.

But his appearance, from whatever direction he came, always carried me back to the halcyon days of my youth, and invoked a vision of a brisk young man stepping out of his way to perform a kindly service for a round-faced country boy come to the city to seek his fortune. That picture will always last. His wants have generally been modest, and I need scarcely add that his claims on me have never failed of recognition. If, in opening my purse, I have sometimes opened my lips and besought him to be a man, it is but common justice to him to say that he has invariably promised to mend his ways. But he has steadily gone down hill, and has well nigh reached the bottom. I know better than scarcely any other man can know, how hard he has tried to retrace the steps taken under social pressure, years ago, and which have led to his decadence, physically and intellectually. He has struggled against a cruel fate and has failed. It was with sincere sorrow that I last saw him pale, weak and emaciated. I judge that the old enemy is conquered at last; but it is too late. A more merciless enemy, one on whom we may exhaust strength of will in vain, is obviously preying upon his shattered frame.

Some day we shall read of his death, and the casual acquaintance will say: "Drank himself into the consumption. Poor fellow! he deserved a better end." and will think no more about him. But when the writer reads that announcement he will feel sad and grieved for many a day; for Finn was once kind to a boy whose catalogue of friends was limited enough then, and to whose eyes the tears will start unbidden when recurring Junes remind him that above the friend of his youth a mound rises on which the daisies bloom and the grass waves sadly in the summer air.—[The Electric Age.

Utilizing Waste Material.

The market is furnished with glue from the slaughter-house jaw-bones and hoofs; coagulated cattle blood is used by calico printers and in the preparation of red liquor for printers' work; dried blood serves to clarify wines and syrups; neatsfoot oil is another valuable product from the same source; the bladders when dried and prepared make useful containers for druggists and painters; the ox-gall is used for liniment and many other purposes, and tallow, one of the staple articles of commerce, comes from the rough pieces of fat. Hot tanks are great levelers, and every scrap of sinews, loose bones, or small rough pieces are boiled down to shreds and fragments, and the liquor, when drawn off and cooled, produces glue or other valuable material. Even the dirt and residue at the bottom of the tank is sold as "tankage" for fertilizing, and refuse blood is easily collected and turned to account. The caul and best parts of the fat are rendered into oleo oil for making artificial butter, and the pressings give us the stearine of commerce. These are only a few of the products resulting from careful investigation of recent years. Not a particle of the materials around the large slaughter-houses is wasted, and the result of utilizing what was previously thrown away has brought out a formidable source of competition in the glue and fertilizer trades, which has to be met by reduced values.—[Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter.

Millions of Eels.

We have good words for our New Milford friends whose rations of eels have been shortened by the big dam in the Housatonic above Shelton. Sunday there were millions of eels, small fry, headed to the north where they can grow to the long three and four footers. Little pools of water beside the fishway were literally alive and black with great masses of them which could not seem to be accommodated in the trickling of streams, and so they crawled like snakes upon the damp earth or, hugging to the moistened sides of the fishway, pushed on toward the summit. The advance of the procession was not far from the top while long lines could be seen coming in from the river, and worming their way along in the wake of the advance guard. An enemy, in the shape of a dog was, however, attacking the eels furiously. When persons would lift the squirmers up by the double handful, the dog, a little Scotch terrier, would devour them with great gusto, and when they were not fed to him in this fashion he would stick his mouth into the water and take them himself. This operation was continued until the little dog was as round as a fattened eel. Numerous spectators looked on with astonishment at the capacity of the dog whose stomach must now be a pretty full eel pond. As there was no mastication, the little fellow will probably have enough live food to last him several days.—[Ansonia Sentinal.

An Odd School Book.

"The new 'Primer for the People's Schools in Kameroon,' Africa, compiled by Dr. Christaller, has been presented to Prince Bismarck," says a London newspaper. "It appears that the native children will have to learn four different alphabets—German print, German writing, Duala print, and Duala writing. The Duala language is not to be printed or written in the customary German letters, but in the so-called Latin letters which are used by all the people of Western Europe except the Germans, and which the latter now use in all their scientific works. Perhaps the English reader would like to see a specimen of Duala. The reading-book contains a chapter on 'The Mouse,' which stands as follows in Duala: 'Pue e salo. (The mouse is little.) E bon mondo ma bwaba, na masongo, ma bowoli. (She had a long tail and sharp teeth.) Pue e tond koketele, na ny amse gita e buka nema e ma-da. (The mouse is fond of gnawing, and spoils much more than she can eat.) The many open vowels and the comparative fewness of consonants give the Duala language a very melodious character, and render it peculiarly 'singable.'"

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

The Farmer's Pests.

Rats and mice are among the most vexatious and destructive of all enemies that beset the farmer, and careless people who leave litter in old buildings in which they can shelter and breed are guilty of a serious nuisance. The best checks upon them are metal and neatness—the former to come between them and all crib, granary and feed-room stores, and the latter which prevents their finding anything eatable lying about. Dogs and cats trained to hunt them soon make their quarters too uncomfortable, and they suddenly vamouse to other safer places, where food is not so shut up. They cannot endure copperas, and are said to leave when it is strewed about, put in their holes, or used in the whitewash.—[New York Tribune.

No Adulteration of Cheese.

It is a pleasure to note that so far as known, no substitute for cheese or imitations of the article have yet been imposed upon the people, and it is to be hoped there never will be, since cheese also forms a very universal article of diet, and a very healthful diet, as it contains most of the essential qualities of milk in solid form. The very extensive adulteration of milk and butter is a serious matter, and calls for decided action on the part of farmers. There should be united effort and general organization throughout the country for the protection of the dairy interests, the aim being first to secure the enaction and enforcement of more specific and stringent laws governing this matter; second, to improve the quality of dairy products, especially butter, in order to shut out the spurious articles. This accomplished, the good resulting will be threefold: First an increased income to the farmer; second, the securing to the people pure, wholesome articles of diet in this line; and third, the checking of the nefarious business of that class of human vultures who fatten themselves at the expense of the public health, by forcing on the market worthless and unhealthy articles.—[Prairie Farmer.

Life of Fruit Trees.

The most eminent authorities upon fruit culture may err in their deductions from their observations of fruits in another country or even another section of their own country. Thus, a writer of the first rank upon subjects of horticulture wrote and published some two years since, that after visiting California he had concluded that although fruit trees grew much faster there than elsewhere in the United States and came into bearing earlier, it was a fair inference that because of such earlier fruiting the trees would not be as long lived as in the east. We venture the statement, says the California Fruit-Grower, that the precise reverse of this is true. We know of California peach trees 35 years old and grape vines one hundred years old, both in strong, healthy condition and still bearing fine fruit. Of apple, pear, and cherry trees there are great numbers in California which are still older, but that is also true of the east, whilst it is not so of peaches and grapes. The fact is, that we do not yet know the possible age and bearing life of trees and vines in this state. What effects continuous cultivation may have upon the soil and the plants, or what impairment of vitality may be wrought by insect pests, are still matters of mere conjecture. We certainly have not as yet, however, sufficient data to warrant the conclusion that upon our new lands at least our fruits will not be of longer life than are the same fruits in the east. We ask fruit-growers to send us reports of ages of trees and vines still full in bearing, with remarks upon the same.

Damp Cellars.

The most prominent causes of damp cellars are: 1. Dampness permeating the walls; 2. Dampness from saturated soil appearing below the walls; 3. Dampness from imperfect plumbing; 4. Moist ground-air permeating cellar bottom, forced in by air pressure.

The first, says Building Trades Journal, is an evidence of either poor workmanship and material or imperfect drainage. Should it be the former, and discovered in time, a compulsory removal of the work is the best remedy. A good wall (stone is here understood) should have every space completely filled. Small, flat stones make the best work when carefully bonded and fitted. Look out for walls showing nothing but large flat stone on the outer face, as such are often but dry concrete in the centre. If the work has progressed too far to allow the wall to be taken down, the remedy is a thorough coating of cement on the outside—from grade to footing—backed by a careful drainage of the immediate vicinity. Great care is necessary to keep the surface water from the building on all sides. It will not suffice to keep it five, 10 or 20 feet away, and then allow it to pool, as the ground will absorb it, and if the strata should happen to incline in the direction of the cellar, conduct the moisture to the wall, where, although, perhaps, not appearing in drops on the surface, still keeping the joints damp enough to affect the atmosphere and cause the mortar to decay.

Good, clean, yellow clay, well puddled and rammed around the walls, is an excellent protection, and one that should never be omitted.

Meat Value of Mutton.

Sheepkeepers disposed to despond on account of the decline of mutton from the early spring standard are reminded by the National Stockman that prices are still considerably higher, as any one knows who has made the market a study for a term of years. Many other authorities on the subject—including Colonel Curtis—have pointed out the assured and increasing profits to follow improvement of flocks for table supply, and the American Public Health Association urge attention to the same matter on account of its hygienic importance:

"Mutton is more easily digested than beef though in a healthy man no marked difference would be observed, since in the stomach of such a man there arises no inconvenience from the digestion of beef. However, mutton will be found to tax the stomach of the dyspeptic less than beef does, and mutton broth is both acceptable and valuable to a person suffering from dysentery or kindred affections of the bowels. But mutton is not so nutritious as beef. In dressing a mutton the woolly coat should not be allowed to touch the flesh. There is quite a perceptible difference in the flavor of mutton taken from a fattened wether which has been for some time deprived of all excess in his woolly coat, and of that taken from a sheep which has heavy fleece. The smallest proportion of both fat and bone to muscle is found in the leg; consequently this is the most valuable part of the animal. Lamb is not nearly so nutritious as mutton. The tissue is soft, gelatinous and rich in water. It is used principally on account of its delicacy of flavor, which, however, is very variable, depending upon the breed and nourishment. Lamb should not be selected for those whose digestive organs are weak."

Horseradish.

Every family garden should have its supply of horseradish. Too commonly the plant is set in an out of the way place, and left there year after year, to be dug from as wanted. Thus treated it becomes an unsightly nuisance, and a weed difficult of extermination. The proper way to grow horseradish is to plant it every spring, and to allow it to remain in the soil but a single season. Instead of setting in poor soil it should have a rich one. The market gardeners plant it to succeed their early cabbages, and to occupy the land when that crop is off. In preparing horseradish for market, the small side roots that are cut away are saved to be used as "sets" for planting. These sets are cut about six inches long, and to make sure that they shall be planted right side up they are cut square across at the top, while the bottom end is cut slanting. These sets when prepared in the fall are made into bundles of 50 or 100, and preserved through the winter in trenches, the same as other roots. They are usually on sale at the seed stores in spring. When planted as a crop to follow cabbage a set is planted between every two cabbages in the row. A hole is made with a light crowbar, the set dropped in, and the hole filled with earth, leaving the top of the set several inches below the surface. If the horseradish comes up before the cabbages are off, its tops, in hoeing, are treated the same as weeds, until the removal of the cabbages gives them full possession of the soil. In the family garden horseradish is usually planted by itself in rows, the plants being twelve by eighteen inches apart. The crop should be hoed until the broad foliage keeps down the weeds. In the fall the roots are dug, trimmed and stored in trenches for the winter, saving the small roots for sets. If all the crop is not dug in the fall, make it a point to take it up next spring. In growing horseradish whether in the field or garden it should be a rule to never leave the roots in the ground over a single season; dig them, even if they are to be thrown away, otherwise they will soon become troublesome weeds.—[American Agriculturist.

The Valuable Cocoanut Tree.

"A full-grown cocoanut tree will mature from sixty to a hundred nuts annually," said a New York dealer to a Mail and Express reporter. "In reality the cocoanut tree is one of the most valuable trees in the world, nearly every part of it being useful to man. The natives eat the young roots and also weave them into baskets. The tender leaves are cooked like cabbage, and the old leaves are made into cloth, hats, baskets, fans, lanterns, etc. It is also used for bedding, for thatching roofs, for fishing nets, even for writing paper. The magnificent trunk of the tree furnishes canoes, house posts and fences. The ribs of the leaves are so strong that they make excellent paddles for boats, arrows, combs, torches and no end of other useful things. When the wood is burned it makes the very best potash for soap. By a peculiar process of fermentation, good vinegar can be obtained from it, and also a fair kind of sugar. The name of the fruit is derived from the Portuguese word coco, and the English word nut. Cocoa means 'an ugly mask,' and is said to have been given because the end of a cocoanut looks like a monkey's face. Last year 360,000 cocoanuts were brought to this market, the average wholesale price being four cents apiece. It is expected that the figures this season will be nearly half a million."

The New Water Main.

The cargo of water pipe which has been expected for some weeks, arrived last Saturday, the vessel having been detained in Hull roads for two or three days, owing to the captain not being able to procure the services of a tug. The pipe is mostly eight inch, and as a new main is expected to be laid to the Landing village much interest is felt by residents here as to which route will be selected, as many water takers on the higher ground have had a rather scant supply at times, and desire that connection be made with the high service pipe, which passes through Mill street. This pipe, however, is a six inch main, and it was at first thought that the connection would require its removal through the entire length of the street and laying of an eight inch main, but we learn from Sup't Reis that by using a reducer the six and eight inch pipes can be connected, thus doing away with the relaying in Mill street. Connection with the gravity service on Main street would give a straight run of water to the Landing, doing away with some of the loss of pressure through the friction of the present circuitous course, but as the supply of water at the pond is abundant, it is hoped that the Water Commissioners will provide a service which will give every water taker a full supply at all times.

Victorious Again.

The "Gen'l Bates" fire engine which was sold by our Fire Dep't to the town of Lisbon Falls, Me., was the victor in a contest for a silver trumpet with the champion engine of Maine, July 4. The Lisbon Observer says:—"In the afternoon came the most interesting feature of the day, that of the contest between the "Gen'l Bates," the pride of Lisbon Falls, and the "Niagara" of Brunswick, the champion of the state. The Gen'l Bates had the first trial and in spite of the heavy cross wind that was blowing, made the magnificent throw of 203 feet 8 inches. The Niagara was pulled on to the spot and had her three trials, but couldn't get there by 19 feet and 2 inches, much to their chagrin, as they had expressed themselves that it would be better to send the trumpet down to them."

Novel Search.

Officer Garey had a difficult job recently in endeavoring to discover the hiding place of the liquor at a resort where he was satisfied the ardent was sold, but a new method of search however, came to his mind, and directing Officer Gardner to walk past the place, as though he was reconnoitreing, Capt. Garey posted himself in the tower of the church with spyglass in hand and waited developments. The venders evidently supposed on seeing officer Gardner, that a raid was contemplated, and after he had left the place officer Garey saw the parties conveying packages from the house and hiding them in the ground outside. To their surprise the officers soon appeared and going to the spot with a shovel unearthed the liquor.

Resigned.

A few weeks ago two gentlemen who were strangers here, appeared in town, and visited several of our leading residents, their object evidently being to secure the services of one of our school teachers. The strangers were from Willimantic, Conn., and their visit resulted in an invitation to Mr. F. H. Beede, who has for several years been Principal of the North High school, to take charge of the High school in Willimantic, which call has been accepted by him, at an advanced salary. Mr. Beede has been very successful in his duties here, being an educator of ability and thoroughness, and his departure will be much regretted by all who have known him, and he carries with him the heartiest wishes for his success in the new field of educational labor.

The Rustic Fountain.

The new fountain on Garfield square, the design of which was drawn by Dr. W. F. Hathaway, and which has been erected by the Improvement Association, under his supervision, is a wide departure from the structures erected at other squares, the design being of a rustic character, the walls being of rough stone, laid up in circular form, and supporting a basin for animals to drink from, with two small basins on each side, a lantern frame being arched over the top. The enclosed space at the top of the structure will be filled with flowering plants, and with running vines covering the walls, the effect, when the work is completed, will be very pleasing. A hammered stone curb surrounds the base of the fountain.

K. of P.

Arrangements are being made for a visitation of Brockton Division Uniform Rank, K. of P., connected with Damocles Lodge, of that city, to Delphi Lodge, of Weymouth, which is to occur next Thursday, when the Knights will have a grand reception. The visitors will be received by the Weymouth knights on their arrival and a parade will be made through the principal streets, to the K. of P. hall, where supper will be served and the installation of officers take place.

The St. John, N. B. Globe refers to the recent marriage in this town of Geo. Travis, Esq., of that place, to Mrs. Sarah Jordan, as follows:

Matrimonial.—An announcement in the usual place will interest a good many readers. George Travis, Esq., lately Collector of the Inland Revenue at this port, was married on the 5th inst., at Weymouth, Mass. Mr. Travis has lived in almost every part of the world, but has led too busy a life to allow for time to enjoy connubial bliss. For the last twenty-one years he has been in the Inland Revenue office, here, the duties of which in various grades up to the Collectorship, so engrossed his thoughts that he never found time to indulge in matrimony. But his retirement from active official work on the 1st of July still left him in the prime of life and the vigor of a fine constitution and he lost no time in assuming the new and important responsibilities, which bring with them sweet reward. Mr. Travis's many friends will extend to him and his bride hearty congratulations.

Excursions.

Tuesday last the Union Cong'l society made an excursion to Nantasket beach, via the railroad. The weather was delightful, and the large party found the day very enjoyable.

On Wednesday, the Baptist society made an excursion to the beach, making the Pavilion their headquarters. The excursion was made on the cars.

The same day the First Universalist society visited Melville Garden, Downer Landing, being conveyed in the barges of Mr. A. L. Hobart.

Rev. George C. King.

Again for the third time in the short space of two months the members of the Methodist Episcopal church of East Weymouth have been called upon to mourn the loss of one of their number, this time it being their beloved pastor, Rev George C. King, who died suddenly last Friday, shortly after 10 o'clock. He was about town the day before and appeared to be in perfect health and bidding fair to continue in his chosen work for many years, but it was destined otherwise, and almost without warning he was called by Him who doeth all things well, to that home not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Thursday evening he complained of a pain in his stomach, which was thought to be due to indigestion and he called upon his physician, who gave him something to relieve the pain, after which he retired for the night. The next morning still being in pain the physician was again called and left his patient somewhat better. Thinking that if he should lay down he would be relieved he retired, and shortly afterwards when his wife went in to see how he was, she found that he had passed quietly away.

He was born in Worcester, June 24, 1853, and was the son of George T. and Sarah Ann King. He received his early education in the public schools and spent his youth in his native place, at one time being employed in the office of the Worcester railroad there. It was here that he was converted and becoming conscious of a call to the ministry he went to Wilbraham, Mass., to prepare for college, doing three years' work in less than two, and taking fine rank as a scholar. He then entered the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., here being especially noted for his oratorical ability as well as a conscientious student. During his stay at the University he was given charge of the Rocky Hill society, at Rocky Hill, Conn. Failing health at the end of his junior year led him at his own request, to be transferred to Walnut City, Iowa, in the Des Moines conference. The life of a preacher on the frontier circuit was especially beneficial and at the end of the year 1878 he returned and joined the New England Southern conference, being settled over the Mystic Bridge society in Conn. He remained there through the years 1879, '80, and '81, and was then settled over the Sachem Street society at Norwich, Conn., remaining there through the years 1882, '83, and '84. In the years 1885 and '86 he had charge of the Centenary church, Provincetown, Mass., coming to East Weymouth in April 1887, where he has been since that time. October, 1879, he married Nellie, daughter of Charles E. Kimball, a well-known citizen of Lynn. Two children were born, a son who died in infancy, and a daughter now in her fifth year, who with his wife survive him. Mr. King has one sister and one brother living in Worcester, the latter being a member of the well known firm of E. P. Smith & Co., of that place. Mr. King, although located here but about fifteen months, gained many fast and firm friends, endearing himself to all, for none knew him but to love and respect. He had a kind and pleasant word for all, and was ever ready and willing to do whatever lay in his power to ameliorate the sufferings of others, and his sudden demise has been a severe shock to his parish and to the community in which he has resided for so short a time.

The funeral took place from the Methodist Episcopal church Monday, at 2 o'clock. After a brief prayer at the parsonage the body was taken to the church, where a large number had assembled, the remains being encased in a black broadcloth covered casket, on the silver plate of which was inscribed

GEORGE C. KING,
Died July 6, 1888,
Aged 35 years, 12 days.

The body was carried up the centre aisle, preceded by the clergy chanting "I am the resurrection and the life," the organ meanwhile sounding a soft voluntary. After the casket had been deposited in the chancel, which was trimmed with many beautiful flowers, the clergy who were to take part in the exercises were seated upon the platform on either side of the pastor's chair, which was draped in black with a bow of white and a cluster of lillies, over which was a semi-circle with a dark background bordered with green, bearing the motto "Gone Home." The exercises were then commenced with the reading of the 90th Psalm by Rev. Merrill Blanchard; reading of the Scripture lesson from 1 Cor. 15th chapter, verses 41 to 58, by Rev. John D. Pickles of Lynn; singing, "Lead Kindly Light," by the choir; prayer by Rev. Walter Ela, of Attleboro; response by choir, "Jesus, lover of my soul;" remarks by Rev. V. A. Cooper, Sup't of Little Wanderers Home, Boston; reading by request of poem entitled "Not Dead, but Risen," by Rev. C. W. Holden of Willimantic, Conn.; remarks by Rev. H. D. Robinson, of Providence, R. I., who was the Presiding Elder under whom the deceased first worked, and Rev. D. A. Jordan, Presiding Elder of this district.

An opportunity was then given for a farewell look at the face of the sleeper, when the funeral cortege was formed in the following order:

Sunday School, Geo. W. Dyer Sup't.
Members of the Church.
Clergy.
Official Board of the Church.
Hearse with the following bearers: Geo. A. Miles, L. W. Cain, Joseph A. Cushing, John W. Bates, Francis Pool, C. W. Rice.
Carriages containing mourners and friends.

The procession moved to the East Weymouth cemetery, where the church burial service was read by Rev. Julian A. Wadsworth, of Centreville, R. I., and benediction pronounced by Rev. D. A. Jordan, after which the members of the Sunday school passed around the casket, each scholar depositing a bouquet of flowers upon it. The remains were then placed in the receiving tomb, remaining there until Thursday, when they were taken to Lynn, and interred in the family lot of Mr. Charles E. Kimball, a committee from this church accompanying the body.

There was a large number of the clergy and friends present, those coming from out of town being met at the depot on the arrival of the noon train by Messrs. Z. L. Bicknell, George H. Cunningham, Joseph A. Cushing, and Francis Pool, when carriages were taken to the church, lunch being served in the vestry. Among those present were Rev. D. A. Jordan, Presiding Elder of this district, Rev. C. W. Holden, Willimantic, Conn.; Rev. H. D. Robinson, Providence, R. I.; Rev. Walter Ela, Attleboro, Mass.; Rev. V. A. Cooper, Supt. Farren, a native of this town, and who has been the pastor of the Baptist church in North Billerica for several years, has resigned his charge to the regret of the society, who have expressed their warm attachment to their pastor in a testimonial letter referring to his faithfulness, zeal and energy in pastoral work, and enclosing a generous sum of money for his use, to which the pastor has made feeling reply, stating that while he appreciates the liberal gift he values far more the kind feelings that prompted it and the generous words that accompanied it, which would ever be an inspiration and a help to him in future labors. This was the first pastorate of Mr. Farren, where he was ordained to the ministry, and where he was married, and in his pastoral work there he has been quite successful.

Gettysburg.

A writer who has attended the battle anniversary at Gettysburg says that the number of memorial structures of Massachusetts troops is so large that it would seem that the soldiers from this state sustained the heaviest share of the conflict which decided the fate of the rebellion. The throng of people at the anniversary was so great that the railroad transportation was greatly impeded, some delegations being delayed 24 hours. The address of Gen. D. E. Sickles was eloquent and vigorous, and in his remarks he defined the war of '61-'65 as our heroic age; it demonstrated the vitality of republican institutions. It illustrated the martial spirit and resources, the genius of the American soldier and sailor. It was a war in which sentiments and ideas dominated interests. The lavish sacrifice of blood and treasure, the unyielding tenacity of the combatants, the constancy and firmness of the people of both sides—men and women, old and young, rich and poor—signalized the great conflict as the heroic age of the republic.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

The newly elected and appointed officers of Wildey lodge, No. 21, I. O. O. F., were installed last Monday evening by District Deputy Grand Master Walter W. Hersey and suite of Hingham, as follows: N. G., Washington H. Thayer; V. G., Frank H. Richards; R. S., Frank W. Tribou; Treas., Edward Pitcher; W., Chas. Gundstrom; Con., Louis A. Cook; O. G., B. B. Burbank; I. G., Geo. B. Bailey; R. S. N. G., G. L. Wentworth. At the close of the service a banquet was served, followed by speeches by the grand officers and others.

The generous hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Fogg made Friday evening last a red letter occasion in the history of the Wednesday Night Club. This organizacion is limited to twenty-five members, and meetings are held once in two weeks with a supper at the end of each term of eight weeks, while the office of president is subject to regular rotation. Mr. Fogg, having wielded the gavel during the past term with excellent judgment and ability, thought to eclipse the plans of his predecessors in connection with his supper night by a unique and brilliant programme which was successfully carried out. Nearly one hundred and fifty ladies and gentlemen, in and out of the village, were invited to meet the members of the club at Mr. Fogg's residence on Torrey street, the hour for the meeting being fixed at 6.30 p. m. For fifteen minutes previous to that hour Mr. and Mrs. Fogg stood in the parlor to receive their guests, and then the scene changed to the church vestry opposite, where Caterer Blunt, of Boston, had prepared a bountiful and tempting repast. One hundred and sixty-three persons sat about the tables, and after an invocation by Rev. Elmer Hewitt, no instructions were necessary regarding the disposition of the feast. About the president were Judge Asa French and Miss French of Braintree, Councillor Morse and Miss Emma French, Theophilus King and wife of Quincy, and John S. Fogg, Esq. After a brief address of welcome by the president, the gentlemen mentioned, and Rev. Mr. Bolster of the club, entertained the company with some very pleasing speeches and made themselves quite solid with the South Weymouth people. Darkness coming on, the guests were invited again to the private residence, where the host and hostess had made everything specially attractive. It was a perfect night and everyone appreciated the fact as they wandered leisurely over the drives and lawn, made brilliant by artificial light, and enlivened by the captivating strains of the American Band. Inside the beautiful residence one could find satisfaction and pleasure in looking at an expensive collection of bric-a-brac, while outside, colored lights and fireworks enhanced the loveliness of the pastoral scene. Everybody enjoyed the opportunities of the evening and the reception to the Wednesday Night Club and others, was brilliant and successful beyond the ordinary social events of our village. The members of the club present with their ladies, were:—

Whitney's ice cream room in Odd Fellows building, and Whitman's ice cream, are a good combination to secure patronage on sultry evenings.

Rum has caused a good deal of trouble and disturbance in the vicinity of Dondaro's fruit stand during the last few days. One crowd stored some of the unlawful in Mr. Whaley's blacksmith shop and another crowd broke in and got it, and at the same time broke the shafts on a carriage in the shop. There is too much trouble in this quarter for the good of the community.

The long talked of base ball game between nines made up of clerks and business men at Columbian and Independence squares, was played Tuesday at the Park. Positions were assigned as follows:

Columbian Squares.	Independence Squares.
Howard Belcher, c.	Eugene Butler, c.
Matt Dowd, p.	Willie Loud, p.
C. H. Tinkham, s s.	A. F. Dyer, s.s.
Frank Nolan, 1b.	Wm. Jay, 1b.
John Madden, 2b.	Abbott Howe, 2b
G. Rockwood, 3b.	Willie Reed, 3b.
C. T. Foster, l.f.	—— Place, l.f.
E. Monahan, c.f.	John L. Sullivan, c.f.
Henry Poole, r.f.	John Butler, r.f.

Umpire—Everett Gardner.

The score was 31 to 4 in favor of the Columbian Squares. The score was too large to make the game interesting, but with a new pitcher, the Independence Squares intend to measure their strength with the other fellows again next Tuesday.

John Butler with his jockey cap and long vizor in the right field, at Tuesday's ball game attracted more attention than all the rest put together. Some of the base running was'nt the finest possible.

The fact having been circulated that a gang of men from Boston, Quincy, Stoughton, and other places, carried on a prize fight at the park, on a recent Sunday morning, the officers of the Agricultural Society desire it stated that the occurrence was unauthorized, the truth being that the crowd stole the right.

One day last week when a coach party from the neighborhood of Pond Plain were going past Music hall on their way to the shore, something dropped, a visiting member from Brockton was seen to hang his head and direct one of the boys of the party to jump out and recover the missing article, which proved to be a two gallon jug. It was a rather suspicious looking article, but considering the reputation of the company, it is safe to say the contents came within the limit of the law.

The mail from Boston by the early a. m. train has lately missed connection at So. Braintree, but efforts are being made to secure a more reliable service.

The assault Tuesday upon a young daughter of Mr. Lawrence Blanchard by Albert Johnson, an Italian, who has been working in the village for two years, caused considerable excitement and parents and citizens were justly indignant. Johnson was arrested, placed in the lockup, and the next morning taken to Quincy, where he was given six months imprisonment and bound over to the next meeting of the Grand Jury. According to the evidence at Quincy this is the same wretch who has been the terror of the community for some months past, assaulting young girls with criminal intent. Now that he is in the hands of the law the punishment should be the severest possible. The Blanchard girl was dragged across the street to the woods, but her cries brought assistance in season to prevent any serious injury.

Certificate of Prof. S. P. Sharples, Assayer of

I consider the White Bronze Monuments practicaly indestructible. They will not blacken or become heir surface as upon marble, and the color will renain unchangeable while the monuments endure.

een the statue of Popparona, which was cast from inc and erected in the city of Lucca, Italy, (accord-ince. No sign of corrosion or change of color has aken place and to all appearance it is as beautiful

To the public:—There is no question in my mind of he durability of the White Bronze Monument. Re-ned zinc, when cast alone and in its pure state, and ot placed in contact with silver, platinum, copper,
tc., is indestructible from the elements, outlasting
he best granites without the discoloration that mar-
le always shows after a few years' exposure. No
ther material is so well fitted to withstand the at-nospheric changes. Judging from a scientific and hemical standpoint, it is my opinion that these monuments will last thousands of years.

16 CENT PANT STRETCHER

16-CENT PANT STRETCHER,

Is positively the BEST invention ever known for taking Wrinkles out of Pantaloons, and shaping the bottoms of the same to fit nicely over the shoe.

Pantaloons should always be suspended as shown in cut when not in use. Even those in daily wear should be thus suspended through the night.

HOW TO APPLY THE STRETCHER.

Take the front bottom part of the pants in the left hand, taking the pointed end of the stretcher in the right hand, insert the wood part up the back of the leg about three-quarters of an inch, then spring the pin point into the front about half an inch from the edge. Pantaloons that are badly wrinkled or bagged at the knee should be dampened. A good way to do this is to hang them out by the stretcher in the evening, or on a damp day.

BASE BALL.

Weymouths vs. Lovell's Corners.

Mr. Editor:—

After two months waiting, our boys arranged a game with the Lovell's Corners to be played last Saturday, and two coach loads of interested spectators went with them to witness the contest. After much unnecessary delay on the part of Manager Martin, of the Lovell's Corners, the game was called with our boys at the bat. They went out in one, two, three order. The Lovell's Corners next appeared with Martin, who hit a hot ground ball between first and second bases, which Colcord fumbled, and the runner was safe. He stole second, and went to third on Mahoney's out at first. Rudderham was given his base on balls. McCormick sent up a pop fly, which Colcord took, and by a quick throw to Stack caught Rudderham off first, effecting a neat double play, retiring the side. For our boys Corridan struck out; Martin made a base hit, but was out at second. Stack was given his base on balls, stole second and third, and went home on Colcord's hot grounder to short, Colcord taking first.

To the surprise of the audience Martin refused to play unless Colcord was declared out at first, he contending that he held the ball at first before Colcord reached there, and the umpire having declared the runner safe. This kick must be considered a very rank one, when we look up the rules which are supposed to govern good games of base ball, which declare that should the runner reach first bag, and the ball be sent there and held by the baseman at one and the same time, the runner shall be safe; thereby giving to the runner the benefit of any doubt. And again, Martin was not on first base when he received the ball, which would make the kick still more ridiculous. So after waiting a legal number of minutes and receiving many unjust and ungentlemanly epithets, the umpire declared the game forfeited to our boys, score 9 to 0.

We think that Captain Martin has been more than commonly severe against our boys, and has used Captain Colcord in a manner far from polite. Captain Colcord has been put off by Captain Martin with such statements as, "we have no afternoon to play with you;" "you are nothing but a 'dub' team;" but he now sees his mistake, as they are his superiors, individually or collectively, on the ball field or off.

WARD THREE.

Cambridges, 7; East Weymouths, 4.

The East Weymouths played their opening game of the season on Saturday last, on the home grounds, having for their antagonists the Tulips, of Cambridge. The result of the game was no surprise to the spectators, as five of the home team had never played a game with each other and were greatly handicapped in consequence. The home team has some very promising players in its ranks, and as soon as they get confidence in themselves will put up a pretty strong game of ball. Totman was in the box for the home team and taking everything into consideration pitched a good game. For the first four innings the visitors could do nothing with his delivery, but then his arm gave out and he was hit more freely. The other new men, Powers, Lonergan and Clark, batted hard and ran bases in great shape. Delaney caught fairly well, but was weak in his throwing, the visitors running bases as they pleased. The remaining features were the playing of Cullen and Quinlan, the former doing some of his old time base running. The catching of McCormick, the short stop playing of Brennan, and fine fly catches by McSorley and Leary, were the features of the visitor's playing. The score:—

NOTES.

It was not a bad game for the first one, the boys will get there by and by.

The East Weymouths need some good coachers to put some life into the game.

Powers is a worker. When he reaches first, look out for a run.

Totman will make a good one when his arm gets into shape.

The East Weymouths play the Lovell's Corners next Saturday and a great game is expected. Manager Lonergan states that an officer will be in attendance, and everybody will be obliged to show a ticket or leave the ground. He is obliged to take this step in order to support the team.

Poem.

By request of friends we publish the poem read by Mr. Holden at the funeral of Rev. George C. King, it being a special favorite of Mr King's. The poem was from the Arabic (by Edwin Arnold) and was read at the funeral of Samuel Bowles.

"Not Dead, but Risen."

He who died at Azim sends
This to comfort all his friends:—

Faithful friends! it lies, I know,
Pale and white and cold as snow;
And ye say, "Abdallah's dead!"
Weeping at the feet and head.
I can see your falling tears,
I can hear your sighs and prayers;
Yet I smile, and whisper this,—
I am not the thing you kiss;
Cease your tears, and let it lie;
It was mine, it is not I.

Sweet friends! what the women lave,
For the last sleep of the grave,
Is a hut which I am quitting,—
Is a garment no more fitting,—
Is a cage, from which, at last,—
Like a bird my soul has passed.
Love the inmate, not the room—
The wearer, not the garb—the plume
Of the eagle, not the bars
That kept him from those splendid stars!

Loving friends! Be wise, and dry
Straightway every weeping eye;
What ye lift upon the bier
Is not worth a single tear.
'Tis an empty sea shell—one
Out of which the pearl has gone;
The shell is broken—it lies there;
The pearl, the all, the soul, is here.
'Tis an earthen jar whose lid
Allah sealed, the while it hid
That treasure of his treasury,
A mind that loved him; let it lie!
Let the shard be earth's once more,
Since the gold is in his store!

Allah glorious! Allah good!
Now thy world is understood;
Now the long, long wonder ends!
Yet ye weep, my erring friends,
While the man whom you call dead,
In unspoken bliss, instead,
Lives and loves you; lost 'tis true,
For the light that shines for you;
But, in the light ye cannot see,
Of undisturbed felicity—
In a perfect paradise,
And a life that never dies.

Farewell, friends! But not farewell
Where I am, ye too shall dwell.
I am gone before your face,
A moment's worth, a little space,
When ye come where I have stept,
Ye will wonder why ye wept;
Ye will know, by true love taught,
That here is all and there is naught.
Weep awhile, if ye are fain—
Sunshine still must follow rain;
Only not at death—for death,
Now we know, is the first breath
Which our souls draw when we enter
Life, which is of all life centre.

Be ye certain all seems love;
Viewed from Allah's throne above!
Be ye stout of heart, and come
Bravely onward to your home!
La-il Allah! Allah la!
O love divine! O love alway!

He who died at Azim gave
This to those who made his grave.

Ladies Who Bloat.

What a great number there are; how uncomfortable it makes them; it is almost impossible for those afflicted to enjoy life. In my private practice I have always found Sulphur Bitters to be the best remedy. All who are thus troubled should use it.

Would You Believe

The Proprietor of Kemp's Balsam gives thousands of bottles away yearly? This mode of advertising would prove ruinous if the Balsam was not a perfect cure for Coughs and all Throat and Lung troubles. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Don't hesitate! Procure a bottle to-day to keep in your home or room for immediate or future use. Trial bottle free at F. H. Morgan's, druggist. Large size 50c and $1.00.

Hatched.

One of our patrons who has been on a tour out west gives us a comical story of a newly arrived emigrant from the Old World who meeting a man driving a mule, with a load of pumpkins in his wagon, inquired into the species of the animal and the nature of the load, both being strangers to him. He was informed that the animal was a mule and the contents of the wagon were mule's eggs, when he asked if the latter would hatch. The farmer assuring him that such would be the case, if he sat on them long enough, the victim took one of the pumpkins along with him to his abode, and tried the experiment for a week, but becoming disgusted with failure he threw the pumpkin down a side hill, when it broke apart just as a jack rabbit jumped out of the brush at the spot and sped away. Catching sight of his long mule-like ears the man was convinced that the sphere had contained a veritable embryo of the animal which he had inquired about, and gave chase, but the jack was making about five hundred feet to his one, and he returned much disappointed.

It is not Best

to always believe everything that a person tells you—but when you hear that the best blood purifier is Sulphur Bitters, you can believe it, for they cured me of a severe case of blood poisoning.

REV. A. FAIRCHILD, New York City.

The Excitement Not Over.

The rush at F. H. Morgan's, druggist, still continues, and daily scores of people call for a bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis and Consumption. Kemp's Balsam, the standard family remedy, is sold on a guarantee and never fails to give entire satisfaction. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial size free.

SULPHUR BITTERS

THE BEST AND GREATEST MEDICINE

It will drive the Humor from your system, and make your skin clean and smooth. Those Pimples and Blotches which mar your beauty are caused by impure blood, and can be removed in a short time, if you are wise and use the great blood purifier, SULPHUR BITTERS. Why suffer with Boils? Why rave with that terrible Headache? Why lay and toss on that bed of pain, with Rheumatism? What makes you tremble so?—Your nerves are all unstrung, and need a gentle soothing tonic to assist nature to repair the damage which your excesses have caused. Sulphur Bitters is not a cheap rum or poor whiskey drink, to be taken by the glass, like other preparations which stimulate only TO DESTROY. It is composed of the choicest Roots, Barks and Berries, combined with the EXTRACT OF SULPHUR in such proportions as to make it NATURE'S GREAT NERVINE.

SULPHUR Bitters

The Dose is small—only a Teaspoonful. It is the best and cheapest medicine. Try it and you will be satisfied. Get it of your druggist. DON'T WAIT. GET IT AT ONCE.

THE TRIBUNE FOR 1888
GREATLY ENLARGED.
Much the Biggest of all the New York Weeklies.
Greater Variety of Contents, New Presses, New Type and New Appliances.
At the Head of the Republican Press.

The New York Weekly Tribune will be enlarged on or before the 1st of January, 1888, by the addition of from four to eight more pages of actual reading matter—an increase of size of great expense to the Tribune, but without expense to the subscriber.

A complete outfit of the new folding and inserting presses will be put into the Tribune's press room in November and December; and the extra sheet will be folded into its place in the main sheet before it comes from the press. The enlarged Tribune will be the biggest and best of all the New York weeklies, and the new machinery will print it in an enlarged form, at the rate of seventy-two thousand copies per hour.

New Features and a great Variety of Contents will be added to THE TRIBUNE during the coming year. Readers will be given nearly a half more for their money than ever before.

Pensions for the old volunteers, especially Service Pensions, are being vigorously agitated in THE TRIBUNE; much space is given in every issue to this subject. Better Protection to Farmers under the tariff; the salvation of the country from the curse of intemperance; and the rescue of the national government from the hands of the rebel brigadiers; these, and all the other live issues of the day are receiving aggressive, earnest and loyal treatment in THE TRIBUNE.

THE TRIBUNE does not attempt to supersede the local State and county press. But, in the great Presidential conflict now at hand, every thinking Republican, old soldier, farmer and temperance man, should have his local paper and THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—WEEKLY, $1 a year; extra copy with every five. SEMI WEEKLY, $2 a year; extra copy with every five. DAILY, $8.50 per year. SUNDAY TRIBUNE, $1.50. New subscribers receive the paper until Jan. 1, 1889. Remit always by draft, check, express or postal money order or registered letter.

PREMIUMS—(1.) THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE'S History of the United States and Pocket Atlas of the World, 16mo., 254 pages, 50 maps, 50 colored diagrams; price, 40 cents; to subscribers, 20 cents; prettiest premium of the year—a fascinating running account of the history of the country, with a great variety of statistics and general information. (2.) Presidential Pocket Knife; subscribers' names and picture of his choice for President on the handle; send for descriptive circular; price at retail, $1.75; but given with THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE one year for the same money, $1.75; two other styles, for less money. (3.) Popular Picture Gallery—6 fine large pictures, including the new officers of the G. A. R., Mr. Blaine, Senators Evarts and Hiscock, "Return of the Mayflower," "Christ Before Pilate," and "Children Writing to Santa Claus;" send for circular. (4.) Waltham Watch; expansion balance movement, stem winder, stem set, seven jewels, nickel case, thoroughly reliable and an excellent watch; with THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, 1 year, for $7.50. (5.) TRIBUNE'S "Book of Open Air Sports." (6.) Webster's "Unabridged Dictionary." (7.) Wood's "Household Medicine." These premiums cannot be described in full here. Send for circular.
THE TRIBUNE, New York.

PEARL FISHING.

Where the Jewels are Found and Artificially Produced.

Curious Facts About the Most Translucent of Gems.

A week or so ago the head oyster-opener of the Hoffman House in New York found a valuable pearl embedded in an oyster that he was opening. The pearl now adorns the shirt bosom of the proprietor of that hotel. A reporter of the Mail and Express talked with an old-time pearl fancier.

"As far back as we have a history for any gems," said the latter, "we have a record of pearls, and not even excepting the diamond is there a jewel so often spoken of in history, sacred and profane, as the pearl. There is scarcely a country on the face of the globe where pearls have not at some period been found, though at the present day the principal fisheries are confined to the coasts of Ceylon, Japan, Java, Sumatra, Bahrein, in the Persian gulf, and the islands in the vicinity of Panama.

"The best pearls are obtained in the Persian gulf. They excel in color, size, purity and that translucency which gives this gem its greatest value. The pearl fisheries in the Persian gulf are said to yield upward of $1,500,000 annually. Those of Panama reach about the same figure. Pearls have also been found in the waters of the United States, and in 1858 considerable excitement was occasioned by the discovery of large pearls near Salem in New Jersey. A New Jersey pearl, over an inch in diameter, found near Paterson, was sent to Paris, where it was purchased by the Empress Eugenie for $2500, and when the crown jewels were sold last year by order of the Ferry government, it was resold for $3700, and is now the property of a wealthy woman of New York.

"The pearl is simply carbonate of lime, with the addition of films of animal membrane between the many layers of mineral matter. It is the animal that, when dry, gives the pearl its hardness. Several species of bivalve mollusks secrete pearls, especially the true pearl oyster, and among fresh water species those sometimes found near Baltimore. It is found that only the old animals produce the gems, and it is fortunate, no doubt, for the guest at the Hoffman that he did not get the bivalve that contained the pearl as he might have ignominiously rejected it, and New York would have one pearl and one sensation less to talk about.

"Can pearls be produced at the will of man, or can they be multiplied by manipulation? It is asserted by oyster fishermen and can be accepted as true that the pearl oyster has the power of covering with additional layers such portions of his shell as need strengthening as well as objects introduced by accident or design. The Chinese and Japanese, taking advantage of this, have long practiced the art of stimulating the secretion by introducing beads made of spar or powdered glass and varnish, or sometimes turned from mother-of-pearl, and thus do they actually succeed in forcing the animal to produce pearls at their will, though of an inferior quality.

"One of the curious circumstances connected with the New Jersey 'pearl fever' of 1858 was the discovery of a few shells showing that many years before some one had experimented upon the pearl-bearing oyster by dropping small mother-of-pearl buttons inside the shell, hoping that the animal would, in course of time cover them with its secretion. The experiments proved a failure, however, the result being that the buttons became fastened to the shells by the action of the secretion, but did not develop into pearls."

The First Meerschaum Pipe.

In 1722 there lived in Pesth, the capital of Hungary, Karol Kowates, a shoemaker, whose ingenuity in cutting and carving on wood, etc., brought him into contact with Count Andrassy, with whom he became a favorite. The Count on his return from a visit to Turkey, brought with him a piece of whitish clay, which had been presented to him as a curiosity on account of its extraordinary light specific gravity. It struck the shoemaker, that, being porous, it must be well adapted for pipes, as it would absorb the nicotine.

The experiment was tried, and Karol cut a pipe for the Count and one for himself. But in pursuit of his trade he could not keep his hands clean, and many a piece of shoemaker's wax became attached to the pipe. The clay, however, instead of assuming a dirty appearance when Karol wiped it off, received, wherever the wax adhered to it, a clear brown polish, instead of the dull white it previously had. Tracing this change in the tint to the proper source, he waxed the whole surface, and polishing the pipe again smoked it and noticed how admirably and beautifully it colored, also how much more sweetly the pipe smoked after being waxed.

Other noblemen, hearing of the wonderful properties of this singular species of clay, imported it in considerable quantities for the manufacture of pipes. The natural scarcity of this much-esteemed article and the great cost of importation in those days of limited facilities for transportation, rendered its use exclusively confined to the richest noblemen until 1830, when it became a more general article of trade. The first meerschaum pipe made by Karol Kowates has been preserved in the museum at Pesth.—[Tobacco.

Dog and Alligator.

As C. S. Church and H. C. Henderson were fishing in a pond on the Cason place, in Madison county, Georgia, a dog swam to them from the bank. Just as he was about to climb into the boat an immense alligator arose near by and made for it. The fishermen endeavored to protect the dog with the paddles, but despite their efforts his 'gatorship was successful in getting the dog in his mouth and sank in the murky depths below. When he caught the dog he was close enough to the boat for the gentlemen to touch him with their hands. They say the 'gator was about twelve feet long and had a mouth like a flour-barrel.—[Chicago Times.

Night-Blooming Primrose.

The primrose, growing along the borders of woods or roadsides, is quite an interesting object to watch after sunset, for then the buds begin to swell, and by little starts and jerks the petals open and soon a beautiful yellow flower is developed. Each blossom expands with a pop, like the cork of a bottle flying out. Don't fail to look for them and watch them. They can be seen along every roadside in the country.—

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

The Factory Girls of London.

"I have heard of ladies but have never seen one," was the answer of a factory girl at the East End, according to the honorable secretary of one of three somewhat similar societies which have been pleading for support in the columns of the London Times. One of these societies entertain daily in London alone between 30 and 40 girls at each of twenty different centres. And yet it certainly does not seem as if the supply of such institutions were likely to be in excess of the demand. When one reads of 150,000 factory girls in London one almost loses hope that any societies will ever grapple successfully with the enormous dimensions of our modern social problems.—[St. James' Gazette.

A Dainty Trimming.

Silver braid seems to have a greater vogue than gold, especially upon gray; outside of France the gray and gold contrast is little appreciated. Soutache is the preferred variety, and a design is followed that will accord with the outline of the panel or bodice or whatever other part of the costume it is to decorate. Occasionally, especially if a yoke effect is to be arranged, threads of gold will cross the parts between the braid, thus giving the appearance of lace in thick and thin threads. The gold threads, which look as delicate as the filaments of a spider's web, are not applied until the soutache is entirely braided on, and then they are sewed from underneath, as the thread must lie quite flat against the background. In either silver or gold this is a very decorative garniture, and with care even the amateur can succeed in arranging it.—[The Delineator.

Comely Girl Advertisements.

Those physical wrecks of men who pace wearily up and down Broadway with placards at their fronts and backs, and familiarly called sandwich men, are not the only persons who promenade as advertisements. Comelier advertisers are several girls sent out by leading milliner and dressmaking establishments. They are models chosen for perfection of face and figure, clothed in the newest and most pronounced costumes or bonnets, and then sent out to walk in Broadway and Fifth avenue. The girls selected for this particular service are those who have been for several years used in their employers' stores as models on which to show off goods to wealthy purchasers, and thus have become known to those customers so well that, on being seen in the streets, they are instantly recognized. Thus the freshest wares offered for sale in those particular shops are announced under the most favorable circumstances. A dress or a bonnet seen out of doors on the person of a beautiful girl is, of course, powerfully recommended, and no doubt that the manufacturers who have resorted to this novel method of announcing their novelties find a good profit in it.—[New York Sun.

Underwear Made of Paper.

Paper fabric will actually take the place of genuine cloth to some extent in summer toilets. In a modification of what used to be called the Fedora front, to be worn by a fashionable girl, the chemisette, or at least a portion of it disclosed between the front edges of the jacket, is composed of paper, stamped and cut in imitation of lace and embroidery. This innovation was premeditated to the extent that an order was sent to China more than a year ago for the manufacture of the stuff in the fibrous sort of paper produced only in that country. Thus it is that the masculine example of paper collars and cuffs has been followed, in an idealized manner, by an acceptance of paper chemisettes. The paper looks exactly like soft, unlaundered linen, and is quite tough enough, it is well to say, to prevent easy accidents in the way of rents. Patterns are ingenious imitations, not only of plain, fine muslin, but of lace. That is timely because there is a tendency to use lace more generously with demi-toilets for the afternoon. Some ladies are returning to the handsome real laces so long laid aside, while the merchants still find their best profit in the fine hand-woven imitation laces so long popular. Gauzes, net, blonde and silk muslins, together with ribbons, are combined with frills, and jabots of lace in plastrons, vests and fichus of various kinds. Even for full dress toilets the seniorita jackets are worn with a full blouse of cream-white China crape.—[Mail and Express.

Evolution of the Prima Donna.

The prima donna of the opera, is only 200 years old. A little after the time of "the glorious revolution" of 1688, the first Italian operatic singer of distinction—Margarita de l'Epine—arrived in England. Italian music was not in the seventeenth century naturalized among us, though a little later some wretched compositions, entitled "Arsinoe" and "Camilla," were foisted on the English public as the genuine article by Clayton, who had composed them in Italy. In one of these, Margarita de l'Epine's English rival, Mrs. Tofts, distinguished herself as far as it was possible to do so in a work which, according to Mr. Sutherland Edwards, comes near being "the worst opera ever written." In a very early page the author reminds us of the exalted positions to which such vocal distinction leads. For a man in the middle classes in this country the road to the peerage lies through politics, the bar or the army, he says, forgetting to add the more recent route, through a brewery—now a kind of "fourth estate" in the realm of social advancement. But for women, "the only road to the peerage is by way of the stage." Though this does not appear to be strictly accurate, since it is not probable that the Baroness Burdett-Coutts is, or was, in any way connected with the stage, it does appear on the broad view to have a substantial foundation. Anastasia Robinson became a countess, and Lavinia Fenton a duchess, and the earl of Nottingham fell desperately in love with Margarita de l'Epine, though she was not clever enough, says Mr. Edwards, "to turn his passions to account."

Buttonhole Makers of New York.

"A buttonhole is a small thing," said a clever working girl of New York to an investigating Telegram reporter; "but it is a blessing to women who earn their living by the needle."

"And why, pray?"

"Because buttonhole makers are well paid."

"Are buttonholes hand-sewed?"

"Perhaps they are in some cases, but the buttonholes of shirts, which I have in mind, are sewed by machinery."

"But what are these heartrending stories about shirts for which women on the east side are paid next to nothing?"

"Those are the ready made shirts that sell at from forty to ninety cents each. They are badly sewed and wretchedly paid women are employed to make them. A great many big manufactories, however, make shirts to order at prices ranging from $18 to $50 a dozen. All the work is well done on these shirts and the buttonhole makers earn large wages."

"And are all the workers on these garments well paid?"

"No; some who do the plain sewing earn only $3 or $4 a week."

"Why is that?"

"Oh," with a scornful toss of her pretty head, "they're old maids and things like that."

"It seems a pity of them, too."

"It is a pity of them. Why it is only the strongest girls, with good young constitutions, that can stand the work necessary to earn large wages. The weaker ones and those with little skill earn small wages, eat cheap, dry luncheons in the shop, and are very poor."

"And what becomes of the young and strong as they grow older?"

"Oh, we—that is, they get married."

Fashion Notes.

Tinsel trimmings are both effective and popular.

The pith bonnet is an English device altogether attractive.

The open-mesh point d'esprit net is more fashionable just now for a bride's veil than illusion.

Sheer white wool, with Roman-red India silk, is much liked in Paris for dressy afternoon gowns.

In many of the latest imported costumes there is a tendency to combine several shades of one color.

Flower bonnets are extensively worn at Summer evening entertainments where a bonnet is necessary.

"Poppy" bonnets are composed entirely of red, black or gray poppies, with velvet petals and a few perky-looking buds.

Although most ladies prefer wool dresses for traveling, silk and wool combinations are often used for such toilets this season.

Straw galloons are very stylish on dresses as well as on millinery, and are sometimes mixed with metal to form still more attractive trimming.

The double straws are very stylish this season, leghorns lined with black chip are particularly pretty and very unique when trimmed with right colors.

Burnt almond is a shade of brown which the French modistes use with corn color and white, making very pretty effects in toilets and millinery also.

Of the white muslin gowns wrought with silk of one color that are among the season's high novelties, those in pale tender green are far and away the prettiest.

Grasses and grains are particularly liked among the artificial foliage this season, and wheat ears are made in every possible metal as well as in straw, for millinery purposes.

Fine plaitings of all sorts take the place of other trimmings, the skirts, waists and sleeves as well as finish for the bottom of the skirts are well laden with finest knife plaitings.

The most picturesque bonnet is the Venetian "Dogaresse," made of gold brocade and having a becoming facing of gold lace and beads falling on the hair in a kind of luxurious coronet.

The Zulu's Love for His Cattle.

The love that a Zulu has for his cattle causes him to ornament them in many ways, some of which entail considerable suffering upon the animals, which, however, he regards from a philosophic point of view, and does not allow it to interfere with his love for them. He trims their ears into all shapes, the favorite pattern being that of a leaf with a deeply serrated edge. He gathers up bunches of the skin upon the head, ties a string tightly around them, and so forms a number of projecting knobs of various sizes and shapes. He cuts strips of hide from the head and face, letting them hang down as lappets, and also cuts the dewlaps and makes a fringe. With others he leaves the skin intact, and lavishes all his art upon the horns. He will cause one horn to project forward and another backward; he will train one upright and the other to the ground. Sometimes he observes a rough kind of symmetry, and has both horns bent with their points nearly touching the shoulders, or trains them, with the tips meeting over the head like an arch, or under the neck like a collar, or turned around the eyes like spectacles. The most singular effect is produced where the horns of a young ox are trained to lie flat upon the skull until the points meet in the middle of the head, when they are manipulated so as to make them coalesce and grow upward like the horn of the unicorn.—[Drake's Magazine.

A Dangerous Practice.

Running to catch trains is declared to be dangerous, not only on account of the immediate perils it involves, but also because it tends in the long run to shorten life. We—at least persons who have passed middle age—have only a certain amount of reserve force, and all that we draw upon in hurries is abstracted from that which should be distributed through the remainder of life. The secret of longevity is probably skill in so economizing the reserve of vital energy as to make it last out an unusual period. Persons who begin unusual exercises in youth may adapt their constitutions to the habit, and may thereby hold on to their full term of life; but this can not be done safely if one waits till mature age before beginning.—Popular Science Monthly.

Utilizing the Sun's Heat.

One of the most interesting and practical methods of utilizing the heat of the sun is that recently invented by Professor Morse, of Salem, Mass. The arrangement consists of a shallow box, the bottom of which is of corrugated iron, and the top of glass. This is placed outside the building in such a position that the sun shines directly upon it; the heat rays of the sun pass directly through the glass, and are absorbed by the iron, heating it to a high temperature, and by a system of ventilation a current of air is passed through the apparatus and into the room to be heated. By this means the air has been heated on sunny days to about 90 deg. Fahr by passing over the iron.—[Public Opinion.

Brutal British Parents.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children has its hands full of prosecutions. Some cases are truly awful. This is the way a neighbor testified regarding a mother's treatment of her four-year-old boy: Once I saw her put the poker into the fire to get it red-hot. The child had vexed her. She held him down to the bed and tied a cloth round his mouth; when the poker was hot she held it on him for about three minutes. She took him off the bed by the hair of the head and flung him on the floor. She picked him up. She severely banged his head against the door till a neighbor came out to see what was the bang. She bit a piece out of his arm. I have often seen her do the like. I recollect once the boy coming to me to borrow a file, afterward I went into their room as he was crying. I turned up his clothes and saw that his back was rough and bleeding. I said to his mother, "Whatever did you do this for?" She said, "Because he took a piece of sugar." She had filed his back with the file I lent her.

"He took a piece of my bread," said a big man who made a little body and head raw, and broken shoulder and arm. The child was four years and six months old. "He stole some sugar," was the reason why a child had been whipped with a scourge of wire on his bare limbs. He was four years old and ten months. "They pester and cry so," said a fat butcher as his excuse for strapping with his loin-belt two little motherless girls who were kept in a room out of the way, without food, save such as they got from neighbors stealthily when he was out. "I have my dogs to feed," was a greyhound breeder's plea for consideration in the matter of starving to within sight of the grave his two children. "Why does not the little devil say what I tell him, and as I tell him?" exclaimed a linguist of 56. He had mutilated a little face with his fist till it was like no human thing.

One grossly brutal case is quoted where a man punished the small victim for being born before marriage. Before it was many days old he soused it on its mother's knee with the contents of a pail of cold water. On another occasion he seized it while sucking at her breast and flung it violently against the wall at the other end of the room. When its mother was out he took it into the yard and put it overhead in a tank of cold water, holding it under until it was with difficulty recovered. "What do you feed the little brat, for?" he would ask his wife.—[London Telegraph.

Deformities.

Mr. Benjamin H. Brewster, formerly attorney-general of the United States, who died last March, was known as one of the foremost jurists and most eloquent orators in the country. An incident of his childhood gives a deeper significance to his success and to his useful life.

When he was a schoolboy of twelve, he was accidentally burned; the sight of one eye was destroyed, and his face was left hopelessly scarred and distorted for life. The misfortune was the greater as he had been a singularly handsome lad, and belonged to a family noted for beauty.

When the boy looked in the glass for the first time, he was silent awhile, and then said, resolutely, "I will make the best of it. It shall make no difference in my life."

His father, to spare him, proposed that he should receive private instruction, live in retirement, and go into some business in which he would not be exposed to the gaze of the curious, but Benjamin boldly returned to school, passed through college, studied law, and entered into politics and society. He was an indefatigable student; he practiced every art which could make him attractive to others.

The result was that he achieved high rank, and held it for half a century not only among the statesmen of the country, but as one of the most popular men in society. He had hosts of friends; strangers, after the first startled glance, yielded to the irresistible charm of his manner, and forgot the blurred face. Having "made the best of it" so long, it is probable that he also forgot it.

Fawcett, the late postmaster-general of England, when he became blind at 19, declared, "It shall not change my purposes in life a whit."

"I will write such books," said the elder Dumas, "that France shall forget my black face."

If any ambitious boy among the readers of the Companion is handicapped by a personal defect, it may give him courage to remember how many great men have carried such burdens in their struggle for fame and success, and been helped rather than hindered by them.

Epictetus's lame leg, Sydney's homely face, Pope's diminutive size were but so many spurs to quicken them to stronger effort.—[Youth's Companion.

The Scarcity of Mocking Birds.

An observant gentleman of our city says he thinks he hears fewer of the South's greatest songsters, the mocking birds, now warbling than ever before, and believes that the feathered singers are abandoning this section. The only way he can account for their disappearance is the advent in this section of those little pests, the English sparrows. They are turbulent and pugnacious little birds, and all other birds which do not possess the same characteristics make haste to abandon their favorite retreats and leave the sparrows in possession of the field. It would be a great pity, indeed, if the South's favorite birds should be forced out or exterminated by the English sparrows.—[Natchez (Miss.) Democrat.

The Sweetest Ship.

As he arranged her rugs and adjusted her steamer chair she said dreamily:

"Mr Byron, don't you think the Etruria is just the sweetest ship afloat?"

"No, indeed, Miss Classic, I don't do anything of the kind," he murmured.

"What ship do you prefer, then—the Umbria?" she inquired, with some surprise.

"Well, I think courtship is about the sweetest of the fleet, don't you?" he asked innocently.

But she pretended to be asleep.—[Ocean.

Petrified Nut in the Coal.

Mr. S. J. Patterson exhibited yesterday a petrified pignut which was found in the Tom Corwin Coal Mine, near Wellston. It was taken from the slate which covered a coal seam. A mass of rock 60 feet in thickness rested upon the slate. The nut was in the hull, and the petrification was complete. A number of specimens of the same kind were found by the miners.—[Dayton (Ohio) Journal.

The Result of Merit.

When anything stands a test of fifty years among a discriminating people, it is pretty good evidence that there is merit somewhere. Few, if any, medicines have met with such continued success and popularity as has marked the progress of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, which, after a trial of over fifty years, are conceded to be the safest and most effectual blood purifier, tonic and alterative ever introduced to the public.

That this is the result of merit, and that BRANDRETH'S PILLS perform all that is claimed for them, is conclusively proved by the fact that those who regard them with the greatest favor are those who have used them the longest.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar-coated.

Was America Ever Discovered?

At the time when Columbus started in search of the New World, nearly every man, woman and child in Europe insisted that there was no New World to discover. When he came back, crowned with success, a large proportion of these good people adhered to their theory; and if they were alive to-day many of them would doubtless insist that America had never been discovered at all. A man will give up anything in this world more readily than a pet theory. For example, look at the individuals who still maintain that consumption is incurable. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has cured thousands upon thousands of cases and will cure thousands more, but these people can't give up their point. Nevertheless the "Discovery" will cure any case of consumption, if taken in time.

A Narrow Escape.

"Yes, I had a very narrow escape," said a prominent citizen to a friend. "I was confined to my bed for a year and my friends gave me up for a consumptive's grave, until I began using Kemp's Balsam for the Throat and Lungs, and here I am, sound and hearty." You will find it for sale by all druggists. Price 50c and $1. Sample Bottle Free.

If there is a "grease spot" on your clothes, stop at the grocer's on your way home and get a cake of Ivory Soap. Apply it to the spot with a piece of flannel, wet with hot water; rub well, then wet a clean place on the flannel and rub again to remove the soap. If the spot is of long standing, use a nail brush. Ivory Soap may be safely used upon any cloth, for it will not impair its strength or change the color.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY.
THE WORLD-FAMED LIVER, BLOOD AND LUNG REMEDY.
WHAT AILS YOU?

[COPYRIGHT, 1887.]

ARE YOU SICK?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in, and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

BILIOUS ATTACK. DAVID G. LOWE, Esq., of St. Agathe, Manitoba, Canada, says: "Being troubled with a terrible bilious attack, fluttering of the heart, poor rest at night, etc., I commenced the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' and derived the very highest benefit therefrom."

LIVER DISEASE. Mrs. I. V. WEBBER, of Yorkshire, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., writes: "For five years previous to taking 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' I was a great sufferer; had a severe pain in my right side continually; was unable to do my own work. I am now well and strong."

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using DR. PIERCE'S GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and bodily health and vigor will be established.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY cures all humors, from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood, are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Virulent blood-poisons are, by its use, robbed of their terrors. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands.

A medicine possessing the power to cure such inveterate blood and skin diseases as the following testimonial portrays, must certainly be credited with possessing properties capable of curing any and all skin and blood diseases, for none are more obstinate or difficult of cure than Salt-rheum.

SALT-RHEUM AND RHEUMATISM. "COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 18th, 1887. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.:

Gentlemen—For several years I have felt it to be my duty to give to you the facts in relation to the complete cure of a most aggravated case of salt-rheum, by the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' An elderly lady relative of mine had been a great sufferer from salt-rheum for upwards of forty years. The disease was most distressing in her hands, causing the skin to crack open on the inside of the fingers at the joints and between the fingers. She was obliged to protect the raw places by means of adhesive plasters, salves, ointments and bandages, and during the winter months had to have her hands dressed daily. The pain was quite severe at times and her general health was badly affected, paving the way for other diseases to creep in. Catarrh and rheumatism caused a great deal of suffering in addition to the salt-rheum. She had used faithfully, and with the most commendable perseverance, all the remedies prescribed by her physicians, but without obtaining relief. She afterwards began treating herself by drinking teas made from blood-purifying roots and herbs. She continued this for several years but derived no benefit. Finally, about ten years ago, I chanced to read one of Dr. Pierce's small pamphlets setting forth the merits of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and other medicines. The name struck my fancy, and seeing that it was essentially a blood-purifier, I immediately recommended it to the old lady who had been so long a sufferer from salt-rheum. She commenced taking it at once, and took one bottle, but seemed to be no better. However, I realized that it would take time for any medicine to effect a change for the better, and encouraged her to continue. She then purchased a half-a-dozen bottles, and before these had all been used she began to notice an improvement. After taking about a dozen bottles she was entirely cured. Her hands were perfectly well and as smooth and healthy as a child's. Her general health was also greatly improved; the rheumatism entirely left her, and the catarrh was almost cured, so that it ceased to be much annoyance. She has enjoyed excellent health from that day to this, and has had no return of either salt-rheum or rheumatism. The 'Discovery' seems to have entirely eradicated the salt-rheum from her system. She is now over eighty years old, and very healthy for one of such extreme age.

I have written this letter, of which you can make any use you see fit, hoping that some sufferer from salt-rheum might chance to read it and obtain relief by using your 'Golden Medical Discovery'—for 'Golden' it is in its curative properties, and as much above the multitude of nostrums and so-called 'patent medicines,' so zealously flaunted before the public, as gold is above the baser metals.

Respectfully yours,
F. W. WHEELER, 182 21st St."

CONSUMPTION, WEAK LUNGS, SPITTING OF BLOOD.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

CONSUMPTION. SOLOMON BUTTS, of North Clayton, Miami Co., Ohio, writes: "I have not the words to express my gratitude for the good your 'Golden Medical Discovery' has done my wife. She was taken with consumption, and after trying one doctor after another I finally gave up all hope of relief. Being very poor and having but one dollar in the world, I prayed to God that he might show me something; and then it seems as though something did tell me to get your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' My wife took it as directed, and as a result she is so she can work now."

GAINED 25 POUNDS. Wasting Disease.—WATSON F. CLARKE, Esq., of (Box 104), Summerside, Prince Edward Island, Can., writes: "When I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' I was not able to work and was a burden to myself. At that time I weighed 129 pounds, and to-day I weigh 147 pounds. Then I used to eat about one meal a day, and now can eat four or five if I dared to."

COUGH OF FIVE YEARS' STANDING. Mrs. N. W. RICE, of Newfane, Vermont, says: "I feel at liberty to acknowledge the benefit I received from two bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' which cured a cough of five years' standing, and dyspepsia, from which I had suffered for a long time. I have also used Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-Weed, or Water Pepper, in my family, with good effect."

WORTH $1000 A BOTTLE. W. R. DAVIS, Esq., of Bellville, Florida, writes: "I have taken your wonderful 'Golden Medical Discovery' and have been cured of consumption. I am now sound and well, and have only spent three dollars, and I would not take three thousand dollars and be put back where I was."

From Within.

Not by the sun tide,
Nor the swift river,
Nor the stars that sweep thro' waste of heaven,
Side by side
Forever and ever,
Do we mark man's life with its loss and gain.

Not by the leaf's fall,
Nor by spring rain,
Nor the atoms that drift thro' endless forms
Changing all
Tho' they changeless remain,
Do we count man's life with its hap and bane.

Not by the strong things,
Nor by things sweet,
Nor by the fair light of sun that speeds far
On swift wings,
Nor the wild winds that meet,
Do we time man's life with its dusk and day.

But by the strong will,
But by the soul's grace,
But by the yearnings that thread night and day
Soft and still,
Till they glow in his face,
Do we tell man's life forever and aye.

A SMART WOMAN.

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

"That woman," said Squire Dockley within himself, "ought to have been a man!"

The English language, as the squire interpreted it, had no higher form of praise than this. The squire believed implicitly in his own sex. And when he said that Maria Poole "ought to have been a man," he did homage to her capacity.

Squire Dockley was on his way to the postoffice. He liked to go in the early morning, before the thermometer had mounted to too high a degree, and while the dew yet sparkled upon the close, short grass along the road.

Old Mr. Poole had been postmaster at Sassafras Gap for 12 years, but his daughter Maria performed all the duties of the position, as the old man was bed-ridden, deaf and helpless. Maria also worked the farm, with the aid of a vacant-faced, red-haired auxiliary, named Elias Smith, who came for half wages on account of a limp in one leg; and she kept boarders in summer.

"There's the clothes all out on the lines, and it ain't 8 o'clock yet," said the squire. "And not a weed in the garden, and nobody to raise a finger about the place but Maria! I declare that woman ought to have been a man!"

Close beside him was the well, shadowed with a canopy of blue-cupped morning-glories which had not yet folded their silken tents away from the sun.

The squire stopped to get a drink of water, when suddenly a human head popped up before him like a jack-in-the-box.

"Je-ru-sa-lem!" ejaculated the squire, starting back. "Why, it's you, ain't it, Miss Poole?"

"Yes, it's me," said Maria. "I've been down the well to clean it. A tin trumpet, two doll babies, a spelling book, a cocoanut shell and fourteen apple-cores—that's what the boarders' children have dropped down since this day week. I sometimes think," giving herself a shake, and sending the surplus moisture of the well flying in all directions, "that King Herod wasn't so far wrong as folks pretend to think. If you want a drink, Squire Dockley you'd better go down to the spring house. The well's sort o' stirred up."

The squire meekly followed Maria Poole down to the cool, sweet-smelling spring-house where a living stream flowed beneath the shelves, all laden with pans of milk and a glittering spring bubbled up in the corner like a magnified diamond.

"Made much butter this year?" the squire inquired as he slaked his thirst.

"Two hundred and nine pounds, packed down a'ready," was Maria's response.

"Well, I declare!" admiringly commented the squire, as he laid down the gourd-shell. "You'd ought to have been a man, Miss Maria; and so I've said ag'in and ag'in."

"Humph," observed Maria. "If I couldn't a-made a smarter man than some I know of, I would give up. Well, squire, I don't want to hurry you, but its 'most time to open the post office and see about the morning mail."

"I was a-thinkin' of calling for my letters and papers," said Squire Dockley, wiping his mouth with a red bandanna pocket-handkerchief.

"Can't nobody get into the postoffice—not if they had a letter for the president himself—afore 8 o'clock," said Miss Maria, curtly. "Business hours is business hours!"

"Yes, I know—I know!" apologized the squire, as he followed Miss Poole up the winding path; "but I was calculatin' to speak to you, Maria."

"Well, what is it? Don't keep me long!"

The squire shifted from one foot to the other. Was ever lover expedited like this before?

"I was a-thinkin', Maria," said he, "that it wan't in place for a woman to be keepin' postoffice—"

"Oh, that's your game, is it?" retorted Maria. "You'd like to get the office away from father, would you? And you're gettin' up a petition to edge some friend o' yourn in? Well, it won't go down, Squire Dockley. All the folks hereabouts know father well, and you won't get no signatures to your papers. And I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself to go and—"

"Hold on, Maria—hold on!" gasped Mr. Dockley, instinctively stepping back a pace or two. "I mistrust you don't quite apprehend me. It's quite another tack as I'm on. I'm a well-to-do man, Maria, without no incumbrance but my son Leonidas, and I've reason to think he's plannin' to get settled in life pretty soon. And lately it's been borne in upon me that I'd orter have a second pardner. The Scripter says it is not well for man to be alone, and the Scripter is generally right. And you're the pardner I'd like to have, Maria Poole!"

The squire beamed. Evidently, in his opinion, there was no sort of doubt but that Maria would accept him, out of hand.

Was he not "The Squire?" and was not Maria Poole a hard-working, ungainly woman, just overstepping the borderland where people would begin to jeer at her lot of "single-blessedness?"

Maria viewed him out of her honest, gray eyes with utter amazement.

"You see," went on Mr. Dockley "you ain't so young as you was, Maria."

"No," thoughtfully observed Maria, stroking her chin in a man-like fashion.

"And you ain't what folks call pretty?"

"No," wincing a little, in spite of herself.

"And there's your father. Most people would object to your father; because—"

"Squire, look here, none o' this!" curtly interrupted Maria. "P'raps you think you've done me a favor, but you ain't! And I've no more time to stand giff-gaffing here, afore the mail is opened. I don't want you. And I wouldn't marry you at no price. There!"

"Very well, very well!" cried the squire, in a great rage. "Do jest as ye think best. I've no more to say. But it ain't likely a plain, humbly old maid like you will get another chance if, indeed, you ever had one afore, which I doubt. I only hope you won't live to regret it, that's all."

And Squire Dockley whisked himself away, never stopping to inquire for his morning's mail.

"A plain, homely old maid!" Maria Poole was only a woman after all, and the old man's brutal words stung her to the very quick.

She had always been well aware that she was not fair to look upon; but a plain, homely old maid!

Was she, then, shut out forever from all the prospects that opened themselves to the eyes of other women?

Nevertheless, she went bravely about her manifold daily duties. She distributed the outgoing letters, stamped the incoming ones, and made her daily report as usual. She saw to the dinner, made her old father comfortable, superintended the affairs of the dairy, gave audience to Elias Smith, and looked after the boarders; and by the time that the soft dusk descended over the hills, she was tired enough. She had often been tired before, but this was a different kind of weariness. It seemed to strike to her very heart.

"I wonder if this sort of thing is to go on forever?" thought she, as she went out into the garden to see if the tomatoes would be ripe for the morrow morning's breakfast.

She was stooping over the vines, when a shadow came between her and the moonlight. She looked up—it was Leonidas Dockley—a tall, well-made young fellow of eight-and-twenty, a most striking contrast to his father.

"Maria, what is the matter?" cried he.

"Nothing is the matter," answered Maria, with a little hysterical laugh. "I suppose you've come to scold me about your father. But I couldn't help it."

"Has he been meddling about the postoffice again?" said Leonidas, soothingly. "Well, don't mind him, Maria. He don't mean anything. It's only his way."

"But, Leonidas—"

"Yes?"

"He says—he says you're going to be married!"

Leonidas looked against the picket-fence, looking thoughtfully down at the scarlet spheres of the tomatoes.

"So I am," said he.

"Oh, Leonidas!"

"You know, Maria, we have never been formally engaged."

"No, but—"

"And I can't go on with things as they are now; it's too uncertain."

"But, Leonidas—"

"So I've made up my mind to marry you this fall whether you consent or not. And if you can't leave your father and the postoffice, why, I'll come here to live. But as for letting you drudge on by yourself as you're doing now, I won't stand it, and there's an end of the matter."

"But, Leonidas, your father says—"

"I don't care what he says!"

"That I'm a plain, homely, old maid."

"My father isn't a judge of the article," calmly asserted Leonidas. "Because it isn't he that wants to marry you."

"Yes, it is, Leonidas."

And then Maria told him the tale of the squire's wooing.

Leonidas listened with a queer curve of the lips, a twinkle in his eye.

"Anyhow," said he, "I've got the start of him this time. He will have to content himself with the Widow Blessington."

The squire's amazement when he heard that Maria Poole was to be his daughter-in-law exceeded description.

"She ain't young," said he slowly, "and she ain't pretty; but I tell you, Leonidas, you're going to get a smart wife—yes, you are!"

As for Maria, she could hardly comprehend the ups and downs of her own fortune. She had lived such a dreary, arid life since she was a child. She had tasted so little of the sweets of love; and now late in the day, as it were, the flower of existence had burst into blossom at last!

"Every one says I ought to have been a man," said she to herself, with a smile on her lip and a tear in her eye; "but if I were a man, I never could be so happy as I am now, in a man's love!"

For there was a good deal of the woman about Maria Poole, after all.—[Saturday Night.

"Girls to Pack Robes."

"Girls to pack robes" was the queer advertisement that attracted a New York Sun reporter's attention, and this is what Henri Chagray said about it:

"There are about 300 girls packing robes in New York City. A robe is a lady's dress. It is a garment for summer wear, made of white cloth and ornamented with imported embroidery. A few years ago, when the fashion was new, these robes were made abroad entirely, the importers brought the cloth and the embroidery done up together in boxes ready for sale. These goods were expensive, costing from $10 to $25 and more a dress. Then there grew up a demand for lower prices and varied styles. Some importers put up their robes in various ways to suit their customers.

"Of course, all the ladies liked the beautiful robes. Competition set in and new ways of getting them up came in vogue. One cut after another was made in the prices, until now you can buy a robe with imported embroidery for fifty-nine cents. It is done up in a neat box, there is the exact amount of cloth necessary to make the dress, and a fashion plate showing how it looks when made up—all for fifty-nine cents. I should say there have been as many as half a million of these robes sold in a single year. We begin to get out the next summer styles in February.

"But the importers found that they could not do the packing in their own places as well or as cheaply as I can do it with my machinery and my trained help. My hundred girls will pack as many as twice the number of inexperienced hands would. They cut the cloth and fold it neatly, and fix in the embroidery and fasten it skilfully, and drop in the fashion-plate in a taking way, so that the woman can't help buying the robes. The poorest woman can buy a fifty-nine cent robe that looks a little like the expensive affairs that were first imported. The latest dodge is to put in American cloth. The embroideries cannot be made in this country. I do not know why, but the attempt to make them has not yet succeeded. Of course the packing requires a girl who is neat, quick and handy, and they get to be very expert. The wages are as high as in any other branch of manual labor."

Paper Flowers.

Paper flowers can be made so natural that when put in proper places, they are not objectionable. A mass of pond lilies, with their heavy green leaves and flexible stems laid under a mirror to be reflected in it, are quite as effective in point of beauty as the lovely owners themselves. A birch bark basket of many hued pansies, with here and there a saucy leaf, can be not only beautiful but odorous, by sprinkling orris root powder in cotton in the bottom of the basket. Snow balls with glossy foliage, when mounted on panels, are ornamental. A branch of dogwood in a dark corner is very effective and easily made. A jar of peonies (the rose scented white one) can almost defy detection if a drop of oil of rose be put in the cotton at the base of the pink seed vessels.

Leaves of all sorts may be made of waste leather from saddleries or harness shops, and cost but a trifle. The outlines of the leaf should be marked with pencil; then gone over with some sharp instrument to leave the impress. Dip the leather in warm water. If thin, a moment will suffice; but if heavy, several minutes. Then, with a stout pair of scissors or sharp knife, cut the leaf, always leaving the stem attached. With a round pointed instrument, such as the head of a steel crochet hook, draw the veins in a natural manner, unless it be a rose leaf or something requiring fine, sharp lines. While the leaf is wet, pull, curl or roll it into a natural appearance (flat leaves are not natural), and put it to dry quickly near, but not in the mouth of an oven. When dry paint with oil; if the leaves should be light, like those of some hot house roses, paint the leather white first. Pond lilies require very thick leather, so do magnolias, while quite thin leather is best for rose leaves, pansies, snow balls and dogwood. Hyacinths and peonies may be cut from thicker leather. Rubber stems may be had at most paper flower depots, but the tubing sold at the drug stores for infants' nursing bottles is excellent for pond lily stems, and thick leather may be cut and rolled to answer at less expense.—[Good Housekeeping.

A Queer Thing About Owls.

A Kingston man has made an addition to his collection of birds, a large owl, lately caught at Hurley. "Owls are deceptive birds," said a citizen today. "I had one, a few years ago, with which I played a trick on the public. I kept the owl in a cage. It was an attraction, and many people saw it. One day the bird died of 'cold poison,' and a taxidermist stuffed it. I then put it back on its perch in the cage. People who had seen the owl alive said that they could see no difference in its appearance, and they would come and admire the bird just the same. That is the reason why I say the owl is a peculiar bird. Dead or alive, they look about the same."—[Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman.

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

How to Destroy Plant Lice.

Mr. J. N. Latta of Hawpatch, La Grange county, after several years' experience, gives an effectual remedy for these very troublesome pests in a paper read before the Illinois Farmers' institute. He says: Aphides, plant lice, green flies, are among the very worst of our fruit pests. First, because of the vast number of species. Second, because of the great number of plants, trees, grasses and shrubs infested by them. Third, because of their being so wonderfully prolific. It is impossible to describe them. Their presence will be known on the apricot, plum, snowball and cherries by the curled up leaves, and if you care to see them just unfold one of those curled leaves and you will be satisfied. If you will spray your trees and plants with the following emulsion, just as they are starting into growth, and again in one week, you will get rid of the most of them: Take six eggs, beat them thoroughly with an egg-beater, put them into a pail, add one and one-half pints of kerosene, pump them for at least one minute, then fill the pail with water. Remember, now, to pump this again, just before you use it. This emulsion will kill the lice on your roses and cabbages. In fact it is a universal louse exterminator.

Enemies of Squashes.

There are two insects among many which attack squashes—the squash-vine borer and the cucumber beetle. The moth of the first named deposits its eggs on the stems of the young vines near the roots, about the time they begin to run, and the young larvæ from them bore into the stem. The full-grown larva is nearly an inch long, tapering to each extremity, of a whitish color, with a dark line along the back. Changing to the perfect insect, it comes out a handsome object, half an inch long, somewhat resembling the perfect insect of the peach grub. The presence of the borer is indicated by the sickly appearance of the plants. Examine them and cut out the enemy. The moths may be prevented from depositing their eggs by banking up the young vines as they grow. The striped or cucumber beetle is much more common and is rather smaller in size. It attacks squash and melon vines, without much preference for either. The larva attacks the stem at or beneath the surface, and the perfect insect or beetle eats the tender stalk or leaves. It thus becomes a double enemy. There are different remedies. For small patches of plants the thumb and finger closely applied is an efficient remedy for the striped beetle; or they may be excluded from the plants with boxes open at the bottom and covered with muslin at the top. Paris green is the best remedy on a larger scale. Mix it very thoroughly with twenty times as much flour and dust it thinly over the plants. It will prove certain death to all that eat it. The larva should be cut out by hand.—[Chicago Times.

Churning and Salting.

What makes butter come? is the question propounded by the United States Dairyman. It is not known whether concussion or friction, or both, cause the separation of the butter from the buttermilk in churning. But we suspect that concussion is the real agent that produces the separation, as we have really seen no churn that did not in some way produce more or less concussion. All the churns we have seen used appear to produce good results, and we find every dairyman is satisfied with the work of the churn he uses, whatever the kind, style or patent. We cannot, therefore, recommend any style of churn as superior to another, but we prefer the simple and less expensive forms, as not only costing less, but being easier to keep clean. The churning should be steady and not violent. A too rapid or sudden separation of the butter from buttermilk is not desirable. It is no recommendation for a churn that it churns quick. Such a churn is apt to injure the so-called grain of the butter, and make it salvy and greasy.

The least churning that will separate the butter from the buttermilk is the best. When to stop churning—The improved model method now in practice by the best butter makers is to stop the churn as soon as the butter is collected in particles the size of a wheat kernel. Just before this, when the first signs of the separation of the butter is seen, the sides of the churn are washed down with cold water—usually below 60 degrees, or about 55 degrees—to not only prevent waste, but to harden the butter and make it easier to handle. When the granules are the size of wheat kernels the butter is drawn off, or the butter taken out of the buttermilk, as the case may be. If the butter is left in the churn water is poured in to float the butter, which is then gently agitated a moment and the water drawn off. This operation is repeated until the water runs clear. Sometimes one of the washings is in brine, which coagulates the caseine into a soluble form and prepares it to be washed out afterward. In this way it is believed that purer, longer keeping butter can be made. In some cases, however, butter makers have customers who want a buttermilk flavor in their butter. They, therefore, do not wash the butter, or wash it very little. Such butter must be consumed at once, as it will not keep. By this method of retaining the butter in a granulated form only sufficient working is required to evenly work in the salt. The less working the better.

The salt, after the butter is properly drained, can be carefully mixed with the butter by stirring. When thoroughly incorporated, barely pressing the butter together in a solid mass is all that is needed. If one does not want butter very salty to the taste, it can be even and nicely salted by completely wetting it with saturated brine, then carefully pressing the granulated butter together and leaving in it as much of the strong brine as will remain. We have seen butter salted in this way, and it was very evenly and completey salted, having in it no undissolved grains of salt, but it was not as salt to the taste as some like. About an ounce to the pound is good salting, but more or less salt must be used to suit the taste of customers. None but refined salt should be put into butter. The principal office of the salt in butter is to impart an agreeable flavor in connection with the natural aroma of fine butter, but it is a fact that too much salt injures good flavor, and it may, to some extent, be used to cover up or neutralize bad flavors. We do not recommend its use for this latter purpose, preferring that the natural flavor of butter from pure cream should be preserved.

Farm Inventive Genius.

An inventive genius or habit is most useful in farm work. There are numerous occasions when some immediate device must be found to meet some unexpected difficulty, and unless this is invented for the occasion the thing is not done. It is an indication of a dull faculty when a person says "it cannot be done," and makes no effort to accomplish the purpose desired. But by repeated trials, after thought given to the nature of the difficulty, success is usually accomplished. This habit of self-reliance is to be encouraged in every way, and its existence and practice are to be found most where least expected and among the least intelligent farmers—that is, those who have no knowledge of art or science and never read a book or paper. We recently came across a farmer with an ox harnessed to a cart in the most original manner. The cart was wholly of wood made with no other tools but an axe and an auger; the harness was wholly of thongs made of hickory bark, and the whip was a hickory sapling having a lash made of the bark of the upper part plaited in the round thong usual with the best leather whips. Among such farmers gates, doors, hinges, and many other necessary domestic articles are made of wood, and the habit of making these things serve on emergencies tends to a habit of self-reliance, quick apprehension, and inventive appliance of the simplest materials that surprises even an educated mechanic. With an axe on the wagon or buggy—a spring, an axle, or a wheel may break—the damage is repaired in a few minutes by means of oak or hickory withes. More civilized farmers would be helpless in such emergencies where they could not run to the carpenter or the blacksmith. Farm mechanics is truly a subject that deserves study and practice, and every farmer should at least bring up one boy to this practice which can be learned at a trifling cost at an agricultural college.—[New York Times.

Farm and Garden Notes.

Keep the weeds well in hand. Don't let them get the start of you.

We do not know of any farm which will support a family without work or care.

President Phillips of the West Michigan Horticultural Society believes that unleached ashes is the best fertilizer known for vineyards.

Drain around the wells. Allow all surface water to flow away. It is a very easy matter to contaminate the drinking water, especially in spring.

Hogs or pigs confined should have their pens kept scrupulously clean during warm weather. Their health and the health of their owner demands it.

Burned bones are useful in the poultry-yard, but do not equal those that are procured in the ground condition. Bones from the butcher, pounded into pieces, are preferred by the hens, as they contain more or less meat.

Do not wait until you are ready to drive into the hay field before you find out whether the mower and hay rake are in working order, and don't forget the oil jug the next time you go to town.

A healthy and able-bodied toad, of industrious habits, will get away with and digest his own weight of insects during twenty-four hours. If you be of an insecticidal turn of mind, turn out by daylight and watch the toads getting breakfast. It is entertaining.

Copper Becoming Fashionable.

"Copper is coming into fashion. What do I mean? Well, look at this lot of canes and umbrellas that I have just imported. You will notice that each one has a piece of ordinary copper wire around the handle.

"Gold and silver have become so common as heads for these articles that people demand something new for a change, and you see the result before you. Just now great simplicity is affected in this respect, but I haven't the slightest doubt that when this metal becomes popular, as I believe it will, we shall see very elaborate personal ornaments made of it.

"Indeed, I have often wondered why copper was not more generally used before this among civilized people as a material for ornaments. Its peculiar color harmonizes perfectly with dark materials and complexions, and it is comparatively free from oxidization. Barbarous? Not a bit of it. True, the aborigines made use of copper to adorn their persons, and in that showed excellent judgment. In matters of taste we might frequently take lessons from the savages.—[Jeweler's Weekly.

Flag Raising.

A crowd of people gathered in Washington square last Friday evening to witness the raising of a "Harrison and Morton" flag, which was thrown to the breeze by the Ward 3 Republican Club. As the flag was unfolded hearty cheers were given, and members of the Dwight Glee Club, who were stationed on the hall balcony, greeted it with a patriotic selection, and the president, Jas. H. Flint, Esq., then invited the assembly to repair to the hall, which was soon filled. The Glee Club furnished singing for the company, and the president made a brief address, inviting all present to enrol their names as members of the club, and fall into line for the Republican victory in November. He alluded to the work of the Republican League of this state, of which Mr. Flint is the secretary, and stated that many encouraging reports had been received, some of them being from towns which had given Democratic majorities, and when cooler weather came the campaign work would be prosecuted with great vigor. The issue of protection to American industries was discussed by him at some length, and he then called upon John J. Loud, Esq., and others to address the meeting. A good number of names were enrolled as club members.

Regatta at Hull.

The regatta of the Hull Yacht Club last Saturday afternoon was an event of especial interest to Weymouth yachtsmen in its feature of a contest between two of the yachts in the Monatiquot Yacht Club, the Posy and Secret. There were no entries in the first and second classes, and at 3.30 the signal for the third class was fired, and the Posy, Secret and Nora started through the Gut with a southwest breeze, the Nora leading. The Posy and Secret set their spinnakers and passed the Nora, but on the course to the West Gut the Posy began to widen the gap between her and the Secret, and when the two came out past Prince's Head the Posy was about 3 minutes ahead, which position she maintained to the finish. The owner of the Nora protested the Posy and Secret for carrying spinnakers and balloon jibs, in violation of the regatta rules. Mr. E. F. Linton, owner of the Secret, kept the yachts in view on the course in his launch, on which his family also embarked. The time of the yachts, as corrected, was Posy, 1-00-43; Secret, 1-05-00; Nora, 1-10-39.

Liquor Case.

The case of F. H. Morgan, druggist, from whose place a lot of liquors was recently taken by Officer Garey, came up in the District Court last Tuesday, the charge being that of keeping liquors with intent to sell. Attorney Washburn, of the law office of Gen. Butler, acted as counsel for Mr. Morgan, and the case was further continued to the 25th inst. The right of an apothecary to use liquors in compounding prescriptions, providing the compound is not an intoxicating beverage, is, we presume, a complication in the case.

Last Saturday Eugene Moran was convicted of keeping a liquor nuisance and fined $50 and costs, with 3 months in the House of Correction.

The case of Johannah Sullivan for keeping liquor nuisance, was continued to August 1st.

Deserter.

One of the crew (a young man) of the lumber schooner "Idaho," just departed from this port, was a deserter from the English army. He made his escape while serving at Bermuda, by stowing himself away in the hold of the Mary McCann, which arrived at Boston recently. He says that he was one of seventy-five who have deserted within six months, most of whom are in New York city. The penalty, if captured, is 84 days in prison. One remark made by the Britisher was that should any trouble ever occur between England and Russia, each and every one of these deserters would return to their homes and surrender themselves.

Water.

Water takers on Summer street, south of Messrs. S. W. & E. Nash's factory, complain about the short supply of water they are obliged to get along with daily, all day Monday it being difficult to draw from the faucet enough for domestic purposes. When asked if the trouble was a rare one the reply was an emphatic no. This scarcity is explained by one person as owing to some takers who reside farther down the street keeping their lawn sprinklers going nearly the entire day. The rules forbid this, and it should be stopped, so that those who are now so much troubled can have the same benefit from Great Pond water as other residents.

Gardening.

The Summer street market gardeners have a large amount of land under cultivation this season for early vegetables. Francis Richards has over 15 acres planted, and has sown a four acre lot recently to turnips. He has between four and five thousand hills of pole beans, two acres cucumbers, and the same of tomatoes and of sweet corn, each crop growing vigorously. Mr. Richards has had a new market wagon built for conveyance of his vegetable products to Boston. In the busy season last year he had five loads marketed some days, the start being made in the evening to arrive in the city early enough to secure a stand at the market. Messrs. Geo. Harris, Wm. H. Bond and W. B. Hollis have also several acres under cultivation.

[From Boston Traveller.

The Second District.

The Herald's report of an interview with Hon. Elijah A. Morse in relation to the Republican nomination in the second district was a myth. Mr. Morse is discharging his duties as a councillor, and attending to his own business, and is preserving a dignified silence in regard to the congressional nomination.

Monatiquot Regattas.

The first championship regatta of the Monatiquot yacht club was sailed off Fort Point last Friday afternoon with a spanking breeze from the northwest, giving the contest an animated aspect. The Moondyne, Folly and Posy, in the first class, had a lively spin over the course, a large number of spectators at the Point watching the movements of the yachts with much interest. Mr. E. F. Linton's yacht Secret was entered in this class, but met with an accident just after leaving the moorings in the river. The Diadem was the only yacht in the jib and mainsail second class, and in the the catrig second class were the Tartar, Rocket, Hester and Guenn. The judges were posted on the steam launch Braintree and their summary of the race was as follows:

The jib and mainsail yachts were the Diadem, Wasp, Snarleyow, Spray, and the catrigs were the Rocket, Guenn, Hester and Maud. The Diadem won the silk pennant in her class, and in the first and cat rig classes another trial will be necessary to decide the contest. The Folly got a leg in her class. The summary:

Yachts will rendevous at the club house at 7.30 o'clock and will follow Commodore Sheppard in his fast sloop "Folly" around the club course. It is hoped that there will be a sufficient number of yachts to accommodate all who would like to enjoy the sail. The club has engaged the services of Mr. Whitmarsh and his sloop yacht "Nettie" for the further accommodation of members and their friends. The club house veranda will be a delightfully cool and pleasant place for those who do not care to sail to sit and watch the fleet, and Caterer Vaughan will be prepared to furnish the yachtsmen and their friends with his excellent ice cream.

The ladies of the Village Cemetery Improvement Association have this season made liberal appropriation for the ornamentation of the grounds, and the large vases filled with flowering plants have added much to the adornment; but to their great indignation some unknown vandal has despoiled one of the vases of the rare plants which it contained, and thus discouraged the ladies in their efforts. The offence is one for which the statutes provide a heavy penalty, and it is hoped that the thief may be detected.

Fire was discovered about 12.30 o'clk. Thursday morning in the back room of the fish market in Jackson square, owned by Dr. C. R. Greeley, and occupied by Valine & Salvador, by the occupants who slept up stairs, who made their escape by jumping out of the window and gave the alarm. The department started for the scene, but were stopped, as the fire had been extinquished with buckets. It is supposed to have been caused by a lamp exploding. The loss was slight.

Saturday night, June 30, a party of young men could be seen wending their way toward the wharf, baggage in hand preparing for an encampment at Worlds End, Nantasket, and the boat set sail managed by Capt. Louis Khey, who had under his command Eugene Hutchinson as mate, C. J. McMorrow Jr. as pilot, and Fred Lewis, who performed the duties of cabin boy and cook. They had not gone far when a storm arose, compelling them to put ashore, where they remained until the storm abated. Having again set sail the pilot and mate overcome with fear, deserted their captain and went ashore at Downer Landing, whence through a blinding rain storm, with the aid of a lantern, the weary sailors pursued their journey to Nantasket, where after some difficulty they procured lodging for the brief space of night which remained before the winged chariot would again start out on its daily route from east to west. The captain and cabin boy proceeded on their perilous journey, their boat being swamped twice on the way. At last they reached their haven, after a narrow escape from a watery grave. They were not long in erecting their tent, and the scattered crew having again collected, soon forgot the dangers they had gone through. Tuesday the party was increased by the arrival of Sam McDonald, David McMorrow and Ed Cullen, who were feasted with a nice chowder prepared by "Doggie." After spending a week in camp the tent, etc. was repacked and soon the young men were safely standing on the banks of Hockley Bay.

"If God be the Savior of all, how is He the special Savior of them that believe?" will be the subject of Rev. Mr. Eaton's sermon in the Universalist church next Sunday afternoon.

A public meeting will be held at Engine hall next Wednesday evening, to devise ways and means for raising five hundred dollars for the purpose of grading, cleaning out the pond, building rockeries, setting out trees, etc., on the park. All are invited to be present.

Mr. Frank Drake, of Quincy, the well known hen dealer, met with a very severe accident while in Boston Tuesday. His horse became frightened and starting on a run, Mr. Drake braced himself against the fore end of the wagon with such force that it gave way, causing him to fall between the horse and wagon. He received several severe cuts about his head and body, but fortunately no bones were broken. The horse in his flight was killed.

There are some fifteen cases of measles in town.

Last Sunday afternoon three men somewhat the worse for liquor indulged in a free fight on Neck street, near North. They took off their coats and pounded each other for some ten or fifteen minutes, when they put on their coats and disappeared.

Mrs. Sarah Trufant, of Boston, is making her annual visit at W. T. Shaw's. Mrs. Trufant is 85 years old, and in full enjoyment of health.

Mr. Henry Newton and wife recently made a trip to Plymouth, to view the attractions of that ancient town, and happily met many old acquaintances, thus making their visit a very pleasant one.

BRAINTREE NOTES.

The steam yacht Gleam, formerly owned by Mr. T. A. Watson, has been lengthened about 15 feet by her new owner, and was brought here last Monday for some repairs to her machinery at the Fore River Engine Works.

The new steamer Corona, the machinery of which was furnished at the Fore River works, is said to be one of the fastest yachts in these waters.

The steam yacht Galatea, of Boston, is at the same works, for machinery repairs.

The yacht Secret has also been built up on the inside, to keep the water out in heavy weather.

A dead calf has been lying in a pasture on Factory hill, for some days, the stench being a public nuisance which should be abated by the board of health.

The Braintree Water Supply Co. has issued a notice to water takers curtailing the use of water for lawn sprinkling, the water not to be used between 9 o'clock in the evening and 7 the next morning, the water in the pond being low.

Braintree water has been put in at the residence of Mr. Jenkins, on Quincy avenue.

A son of Mr. Terrence Starr, of Braintree, was pushed off a gate by some companions Tuesday evening last, and one of his arms was broken in two places. Dr. Dearing attended him.

Mr. John Bates, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, was a little better yesterday.

Alfred Howe, of East Braintree, has been granted a pension.

About twenty little girls from the Day Nursery of New York city, in charge of two ladies, are enjoying a two weeks' outing on the farm of Mr. Amory, at East Braintree.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

The Churches and Sunday Schools have been busy making their annual excursions to Nantasket this week. The two Congregational societies made their excursion Tuesday and the Universalist society had theirs Thursday. Coaches conveyed most of the party on each of these occasions. The character of these Sunday school excursions is somewhat changed from fifteen years ago, when only one or two coaches could be mustered, a long string of private carriages following, and occasionally being caught by the wheels on the pole of J. A. E. Loud's famous running team down Old Colony hill. But they had a good time in those days just the same.

Mr. Louis A. Cook and his family are at Cabot, Vt., during the season. The head of the family returns in about two weeks to look after his diversified interests.

The family of our other lawyer, Mr. Geo. L. Wentworth, are down in Maine till Sept. 1, and in the meantime Mr. Wentworth can be found at Hotel Weymouth for consultation on legal, school and political matters.

The official score of the game of ball played on the fair grounds Saturday, July 14, between H. B. Reed & Co's and J. S. Fogg & Co's shop nines is given below. The features of the game were Burrell's base running, Stetson and Green's playing at first base, Torrey's batting and second base playing, and Kelley's running catch of a difficult fly in the ninth inning.

The village has subsided into a condition of comparative dullness following the excitement of last week, when an Italian libertine was stopped in his bold and dangerous career by a sudden arrest, and Officer Conant varied the monotony of Friday afternoon by conveying a drunken woman from the turnpike to the brick hotel on Central street, all of which furnished material for various talks and comments indoors and on the street corner. Excitement of the kind referred to is not desirable, and we can well be spared a repetition of some of the doings of the past few months.

The Columbian Squares and Independence Squares again measure their strength on the ball field next Tuesday. It is understood that Bass will pitch for the Independence Squares.

The early mail from Boston has missed but once during the week, which is an improvement over last week. Asst. Supt. French of the Old Colony company, states that he is doing all that is possible to make the connection regularly at South Braintree, but as the freight to be handled at this season of the year is very heavy, the freight train to be certain of connection would have to leave Boston earlier than 5 a.m. necessitating longer hours for the already overworked train men, and rather than do this he would prefer not to take the mail by the freight train.

Rev. Mr. Bolster, who is enjoying a rest away from his pulpit, will probably resume preaching services at his church Sunday, July 30. Rev. Mr. Alvord takes his vacation after the first Sunday in August.

Mr. Elon Sherman will have one of the best double tenement houses that has ever been erected in the village, when the workmen now employed by him on the structure have completed their labors.

The effects of the long drought are becoming more conspicuous each day and the efforts of the Improvement Association and private citizens to beautify our surroundings are sadly balked for want of rain. Many of the young shade trees are dying, the lawns are looking yellow, and gardens are suffering badly. The stand pipe has been drawn upon to an unusual degree and a halt has been called to the unnecessary use of water for sprinkling purposes. The clouds may have something in store for us however, which will do considerable to revive and beautify the present parched face of nature.

House painters were never busier than they have been this summer and in some cases orders cannot be filled the present season. This statement would hold good in other trades, and while the remark is often heard that the times are hard in South Weymouth it is hard to get a man or woman to do any kind of a day's work, outside of regular employment. There may not be so much money earned as formerly, but as a general thing is it not true that few men are necessarily idle at the present time? HENRY.

[Certificate of Prof. S. P. Sharples, Assayer of Metals for the State of Mass.] I consider the White Bronze Monuments practically indestructible. [300 Years Without Change—Certificate of A. No sign of corrosion or change of color has taken place and to all appearance it is as beautiful as when first erected.

[Prof. Duffield, Ph. D. M. D.] To the public:—There is no question in my mind of the durability of the White Bronze Monument. Refined zinc, when cast alone and in its pure state, and not placed in contact with silver, platinum, copper, etc., is indestructible from the elements, outlasting the best granites without the discoloration that marble shows after a few years' exposure. No other material is so well fitted to withstand the atmospheric changes. Judging from a scientific and chemical standpoint, it is my opinion that these monuments will last thousands of years.

S. P. DUFFIELD, Ph. D., M. D.

The undersigned having received the agency for these justly celebrated Monuments, would respectfully invite all wishing to erect an enduring and suitable MEMORIAL to their departed friends, to examine the White Bronze Monuments, the most beautiful, durable and the cheapest. The best chemists and scientists in the country testify to its superiority over marble or granite. Reference is made to the many testimonials published in circulars and pamphlets; which will be sent on application to the Agent, who will also furnish designs and show samples of the work and prices.

16 CENT PANT STRETCHER.

16-CENT PANT STRETCHER,

Is positively the BEST invention ever known for taking Wrinkles out of Pantaloons, and shaping the bottoms of the same to fit nicely over the shoe.

Pantaloons should always be suspended as shown in cut when not in use. Even those in daily wear should be thus suspended through the night.

HOW TO APPLY THE STRETCHER.

Take the front bottom part of the pants in the left hand, taking the pointed end of the stretcher in the right hand, insert the wood part up the back of the leg about three-quarters of an inch, then spring the pin point into the front about half an inch from the edge. Pantaloons that are badly wrinkled or bagged at the knee should be dampened. A good way to do this is to hang them out by the stretcher in the evening, or on a damp day.

BASE BALL.

Lovell's Corner, 6; East Weymouths, 3.

The largest audience of the season witnessed the second defeat of the E. Weymouths Saturday last, the victors being the Lovell's Corners. These two clubs should never play against each other, as there is always a grand kick and dispute between them from the first inning to the last, and this game was no exception, as it was continually interrupted by some of the most silly claims imaginable. This was caused in the first place by an incompetent umpire, "on this occasion at least," who although undoubtedly honest, made some ridiculous decisions, and both teams, taking advantage of his incompetency, worked him for all they were worth; the game begun with two umpires, but in the fourth inning, the gentleman mentioned above retired, and Mr. O'Brien finished out the game, and considering the ill feeling that had been created, did well. The game was a great one for the pitchers, both of them doing magnificent work. Rudderham struck out seventeen of the home team. The efforts of some of our boys to reach the ball were very amusing. They struck hard enough at it to send it to Quincy Point. Totman also was very effective, and pitched a game to be proud of. He struck out fourteen of the visitors and notwithstanding the poor support that he received, pitched a winning game; only seven hits were made off his delivery and some of them were very weak ones. The remaining features for the home team were the splendid base running of Powers and Clark. The latter also put up a good fielding game. Delaney's catching was not quite up to the standard and his throwing was very weak. For the visitors, Farrar's splendid work behind the bat, S. French's timely hitting, a splendid stop and throw by Mahoney, were the most prominent points. The score

PICK-UPS.

Delaney is through catching; he is evidently unable to hold Totman and is a poor thrower. A good catcher will be secured for next Saturday.

Totman is doing great work; he has struck out twenty-four men in his first two games.

The home team should practice with the stick; some of them can't hit a balloon.

A catcher like Farrar and one or two good batters would make the East Weymouths a winning team.

Those who were finding fault all last season with the team we had, are just beginning to realize what a strong team it was.

Rogers and Burrell at Randolph and D. and J. Slattery at Whitman are doing good work.

Weymouth vs. Abram French & Co, Boston.

A rattling game of base ball was played upon Clear Field last Saturday afternoon, between the above named clubs. The visiting club are "regulars" having paid players, while our boys are volunteers, receiving only kindly approval if victorious, and unmerited abuse if defeated. Special mention of particular players would seem to be uncalled for when all did so well in their parts. But we must say that with such headwork in the pitcher and sand in the catcher, and double plays by Colcord and Stack, and Stack's unassisted double, the throwing of Ryan and Griffin, the batting of Tirrell and Keefe, and not least if last, that famous one-handed catch of Martin in centre field, were enough to satisfy our greatest crank. Now the base ball crank is he who attends the game, occupies the best post of observation, discusses the play and players to the intense delight of himself and to the utter discomforture of his neighbors, and when the hat is placed near him, "forgot to take his money with him when he shifted his clothes. Below is the score—it will tell the story.

And again the management say to their friends, that through the great public spirit of our fellow townsman, David J. Pierce, they have been allowed to play ball on his land, and they would ask that his property be not disturbed by any person who visits the games to be played there.

Republican League.

A circular from the Secretary of the Republican League of this State, Jas. H. Flint, Esq., states that a large number of clubs have now associated in the League, the headquarters of the organization being at his office, 28 State street, Boston. The circular says "The League makes no assessments and demands no contributions, but will endeavor to raise such small sums as may be needed to carry on its modest work of securing, as far as may be, a thorough club organization of the party in aid of the regular committees. A simple form of organization for local clubs can be had on application to the secretary of the League, and any assistance in the organization of such clubs will be cheerfully rendered.

Sermon to the Young.

Rev. Mr. Eaton preached a sermon to young people on "Reverence," in the Universalist church last Sunday morning. He took his text from the 11th verse of the 89th Psalm: "The Heavens are Thine, the earth also is Thine, the world and the fullness thereof." Mr. Eaton began his discourse by referring to a picture which Goethe has given in one of his works, of the model school. The object of this school was to teach reverence for all things. It was divided into three classes, in the first class being the youngest children, with their eyes directed upward, intently gazing on what was above them. These children were being taught reverence for what was above; reverence for God and Heaven, reverence for all divine and heavenly things.

In the second class were the older children with eyes directed downward. These children were being taught reverence for what was beneath; reverence for the earth out of which all came, upon which all lived, and by which all were nurtured.

In the third class were the eldest children, or youths, with their eyes horizontally directed. The members of this class were being taught reverence for what was about them; reverence for the world, reverence for the dignity of being, reverence for the opportunity and possibility of the life in which they were privileged to mingle.

It is not probable that the great author found his inspiration in the language of the psalmist, yet the picture of the model school gives a fine illustration of that language. The eyes of the pupils seem to be directed in the same way as the psalmist's thoughts. First, upward to the heavens; "The Heavens are Thine." Secondly, downward to the earth; "The earth also is Thine"; and thirdly, out into the world; "The world and the fulness thereof."

Mr. Eaton remarked that this was a beautiful picture and one that was very suggestive of things which both young and old needed to seriously consider. The world was sadly wanting in reverence. In the amount of worldliness, Sabbath desecration and indifference to sacred things which abounded, was made apparent to all thoughtful persons the great need of the cultivation of reverence. Indeed if there was one thing concerning which the sentiment of all classes in the community needed "toning up," that one thing was "reverence." Reverence was not only an attitude that was becoming to all, but was something that was absolutely indispensable to that perfectness of character which all should be desirous of possessing. He then proceeded to speak to the young people on the cultivation of reverence in the three directions indicated; reverence for God and everything divine, for truth and all sacred things; reverence for the earth which God had created, on which He had given them their home, which He had covered with beauty, filled with bounty, and made rich in all things which could contribute to human good; reverence for the world, the world of humanity of which they formed a part; reverence for human nature which they shared; reverence for manhood and womanhood; even that they should so reverence manhood as to keep it from being dishonored, and womanhood so as to keep it from being tarnished. These three divisions of the general subject were treated at length and several illustrations were given and stories told in their elucidation.

Sunday Travel.

A remark was made by a resident the other day that the Sunday travel to the shore had greatly diminished the attendance at church services in all the towns in near location to the beach, and his statement is supported by the crowded trains and steamers last Sunday, several trains being run to Nantasket from different points, filled with passengers, and the boats of the Hingham Steamboat Co. conveying over 15,000 persons.

It is not Best

to always believe everything that a person tells you, but when you hear that the best blood purifier is Sulphur Bitters, you can believe it, for they cured me of a severe case of blood poisoning.

Card of Thanks.

If the proprietor of Kemp's Balsam should publish a card of thanks, containing expressions of gratitude which come to him daily, from those who have been cured of severe throat and lung troubles, by the use of Kemp's Balsam, it would fill a fair sized book. How much better to invite all to call on F. H. Morgan, druggist, and get a free sample bottle that you may test for yourself its power. Large bottles 50c. and $1.00.

The Braintree Observer says:—Joseph T. Bates is a Cleveland and Thurman man, and threw a flag to the breeze the other evening with the names of his favorites thereon; but the end of the rope on which it was suspended, being attached to the gable of the house of Dea. Henry Hill, a Harrison and Morton man, he objected to the heresy of the names. Joe suggested as a compromise, the taking off the names, the Deacon consented and now the flag floats in every wind that blows, with a genuine bandanna attached to the bottom of it."

Mr. Bates informs us that the facts are these. It was in the morning when the flag was thrown out; no names were ever printed upon it; the ropes were never fastened to Dea. Hill's house, nor did Mr. Bates ever compromise the matter, for there was nothing of that sort to do.

THE TRIBUNE FOR 1888
GREATLY ENLARGED.
Much the Biggest of all the New York Weeklies.
Greater Variety of Contents, New Presses, New Type and New Appliances.
At the Head of the Republican Press.

The New York Weekly Tribune will be enlarged on or before the 1st of January, 1888, by the addition of from four to eight more pages of actual reading matter—an increase of size of great expense to the Tribune, but without expense to the subscriber.

A complete outfit of the new folding and inserting presses will be put into the Tribune's press rooms in November and December; and the extra sheet will be folded into its place in the main sheet before it comes from the press. The enlarged Tribune will be the biggest and best of all the New York weeklies, and the new machinery will print it in an enlarged form, at the rate of seventy-two thousand copies per hour.

New Features and a great Variety of Contents will be added to The Tribune during the coming year. Readers will be given nearly a half more for their money than ever before.

Pensions for the old volunteers, especially Service Pensions, are being vigorously agitated in The Tribune; much space is given in every issue to this subject. Better Protection to Farmers under the tariff; the salvation of the country from the curse of intemperance; and the rescue of the national government from the hands of the rebel brigadiers; these, and all the other live issues of the day are receiving aggressive, earnest and loyal treatment in The Tribune.

The Tribune does not attempt to supersede the local State and county press. But, in the great Presidential conflict now at hand, every thinking Republican, old soldier, farmer and temperance man, should have his local paper and The New York Tribune.

Subscription Rates—Weekly, $1 a year; extra copy with every five. Semi-Weekly, $2 a year; extra copy with every five. Daily, $8.50 per year. Sunday Tribune, $1.50. New subscribers receive the paper until Jan. 1, 1889. Remit always by draft, check, express or postal money order or registered letter.

Premiums—(1.) The New York Tribune's History of the United States and Pocket Atlas of the World, 16mo., 254 pages, 50 maps, 50 colored diagrams; price, 40 cents; to subscribers, 20 cents; prettiest premium of the year—a fascinating running account of the history of the country, with a great variety of statistics and general information. (2.) Presidential Pocket Knife; subscribers' names and picture of his choice for President on the handle; send for descriptive circular; price at retail, $1.75; but given with The Weekly Tribune one year for the same money, $1.75; two other styles, for less money. (3) Popular Picture Gallery—6 fine large pictures, including the new officers of the G. A. R., Mr. Blaine, Senators Evarts and Hiscock, "Return of the Mayflower," "Christ Before Pilate," and "Children Writing to Santa Claus;" send for circular. (4) Waltham Watch; expansion balance movement, stem winder, stem set, seven jewels, nickel case, thoroughly reliable and an excellent watch; with The Weekly Tribune, 1 year, for $7.50. (5.) Tribune's "Book of Open Air Sports." (6.) Webster's "Unabridged Dictionary." (7.) Wood's "Household Medicine." These premiums cannot be described in full here. Send for circular.

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

A FEATHER CLOAK.

The Gorgeous Royal Mantle of the Sandwich Islands.

Its Manufacture Took a Century and Cost a Million.

The Washington Star describes the royal feather cloak from the Sandwich Islands that is spread out fan-shaped in a case in the National museum. This cloak is computed to have cost in labor $1,000,000. The native name for it is mama. In the days when a Hawaiian beau or belle wanted little clothing, but wanted that gorgeously colored, this cloak or mantle would have been considered of more value, æsthetically and intrinsically, than a shipload of Worth costumes, and its happy possessor might truly be said to be in high feather. Since the natives have adopted wide trousers, lawn-tennis shirts and four-in-hand ties, its value lies chiefly in the traditions that surround it. The mantle, which is semicircular, is four feet long or deep, and it is 11 1-2 feet wide at the bottom and 23 inches at the top where it goes around the neck. The entire outer surface is made of feathers of fine texture, giving the whole the appearance of plush. The prevailing colors are red and yellow or orange. The body is decorated with large figures, crescent-shaped, of either red or yellow feathers. The upper and lateral borders are corded and decorated with alternate tufts of red, black and yellow feathers.

A legend on a label states that this feather cloak formerly belonged to Kehuarkalani, one of the highest chiefs of the Sandwich Islands. After the abolition of idolatry in 1819 that chief rebelled against the reigning King and attempted to re-establish the ancient religions. A sanguinary battle was fought and Kehuarkalani was slain, and this cloak, which he then had on, fell into the hands of the conquerors, and thus became the property of King Kamehameha, by whom it was presented to Capt. J. H. Aulick, U. S. N., in 1841. The cloak is now the property of Capt. Aulick's grandson, Richmond Ogston Aulick, who deposited it in the National Museum. The great value of the cloak is due to the long time required to secure the feathers that compose it and to manufacture the cloak.

The foundation is a net-work of olona, or native hemp, and to it are attached by fine thread of the same material the feathers of birds found only in the Hawaiian Island, and very rare there. Recent writers have declared that the bird is now extinct. The feathers are woven in so as to lap each other and lie flat, forming a smooth plush-like surface. The inner surface is without lining and shows the olona network and the quill-ends of the feathers. The cord of the upper margin is prolonged so as to serve as a fastening at the throat. The yellow feathers are obtained from the Oo or Uho, and, as stated, are of great value, as the bird is rare, very shy and difficult to capture, and it has but a very small tuft of these feathers upon each shoulder. The black feathers are from the head and back of the same bird—its general plumage being a glossy black. The Oo is caught alive by means of [illegible], the yellow feathers are then plucked and the bird released. The red feathers are from the body and neck of the Drepanis Coccinea, the most abundant bird of the Sandwich Islands.

The Hawaiian Spectator, a newspaper published in 1839, refers to this, or a similar mantle, as follows: "Kawkeauli has the mama or feather war-cloak of his father, Te-Meha-Meha. It was not completed until his reign, having occupied eight preceeding ones in its fabrication. A piece of nankeen, valued at $1.50, was formerly the price of five of the yellow feathers. By this estimate, the value of the cloak would equal that of the purest diamonds in several of the European regalia, and, including the price of the feathers, not less than a million dollar's worth of labor was expended upon it at the present rate of computing wages."

Another authority states that two yellow feathers only are obtained from each Oo, and these are found under the wings. When the much-prized feathers are plucked the bird is set at liberty. The price of the feathers, according to this authority, was $1.50 for three, and the time occupied in making the cloak was estimated from fifty to one hundred years.

Pile Driving.

The ordinary method of forcing a pile into the ground is by repeated blows of a hammer of moderate weight; better success being obtained by frequent blows of the hammer, lifted to a slight elevation, than results from a greater fall, there being danger also in the latter case of injuring the material of the pile. The use of the water jet for sinking piles, particularly in sand, is interesting. A tube, generally of ordinary gas-pipe, open at the lower end, is fastened to the pile; the upper end is connected by a hose to a powerful pump and, the pile being placed in position on the surface of the sand, water is forced through the tube and excavates a passage for the pile, which, by the application of very light pressure, descends rapidly to the desired depth. The stream of water must be continuous, as it rises along the side of the pile and keeps the sand in a mobile state. Immediately upon the cessation of pumping, the sand settles about the pile, and it is sometimes quite impossible to afterward move it. The water jet is used in sinking iron piles by conducting the water through the interior of the hollow pile and out of a hole at its point. The piles of the great iron pier at Coney Island were sunk with great celerity in this way.—[Scribner's Magazine.

The Human Bite.

Physicians agree that the poison conveyed by human teeth is one of the most annoying that they have to deal with. One of them writes to the British Medical Register: "I have under my attention severe and most complicated cases of blood-poisoning, in which the patient had but slightly abraded the hand in the course of a fight by striking the knuckles against the teeth of his opponent. I have known hands thus poisoned only saved from amputation by the application of all the resources of science.

Right in His Line.

"Where did you get that new boiled shirt?" asked one tramp of another.

"I came by it honorably in the line of my profession."

"The line of your profession?"

"Yes, sir. The clothes line."—[Merchant Traveler.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Repulsive Pets.

Ugliness or repelling habits are generally no bar to a ladies' feelings when her pet animal is concerned. Some have been known to share their bed with an iguana, which is the most repulsive looking reptile in Brazil. It is well known that Byron, among the pets who accompanied him in his travels, possessed a bear, and Edmund Kean kept a South American lion as his constant companion. More extraordinary pets might be quoted, such as young wolves, leopards, jackals and snakes. Even frogs, lizards and hedgehogs have been petted by men of repute. Wolsey bestowed his affections on a familiar old carp, Cowper on hares, and Sir John Lubbock wooed the favor of a Syrian wasp.—[Chicago Herald.

A Curious Old Practice.

Talking of customs reminds me of a curious practice which still prevails in some of the provincial towns of England, of presenting the wife of the mayor with a silver cradle should she give birth to a child during her husband's term of office. The old custom is still kept up in the town of Worcester, Eng., where the mayor's wife, having had a child born unto her, was a few weeks ago presented by the corporation with the traditional silver cradle. It was in the form of a dish for fruit or flowers. On each side were cut glass dishes, between which the cradle, which was of wickerwork pattern, swung from the hands of a pair of silver cupids.—[Jewelers' Weekly.

Moorish Fattened Houri.

The position of women among the Moors does not differ greatly from that in all Mohammedan countries, and therefore need not be touched upon. One custom, however, is a curious one, that of fattening the bride for her wedding. The young girl is made to sit in a half-darkened room, wearing anklets so heavy that she can move with difficulty. She is then crammed with pellets of wheat flour and made to drink enormous quantities of water, so that before the bridegroom sees her she shall be bloated to the desirable degree. The Moorish men, themselves so lean, straight and tall, are great admirers of adipose tissue in women, fat being to them an essential element of beauty. "A good load for a camel" is one of their compliments, and everything is done that can conduce to this state. The women, seated always upon soft cushions and crammed with sweetmeats, soon grow enormously fat. Lack of exercise increases the size of their limbs to such a degree that enlargement of the ankles becomes a disease.—[Commercial Advertiser.

Banishing Knives and Forks.

The other day a wandering paragraph drew attention to a wealthy woman in New York, who is gradually doing away with the conventional knife and fork at her banquets, and substituting, instead of those generally regarded as necessary implements for dining, fanciful daggers and miniature swords, enriched with jewels and art work. For instance, roses of tinted enamel, with the end of the stem provided with two convenient therns of gold to be used as a fork, the rose being the handle. This lady argues that ordinary knives and forks were intended for the days gone by, when the dinner parties of society included haunches of venison and mutton served in huge slices to the guests and requiring substantial instruments for the subdivision of the slices into morsels suitable for the mouth. "Those were days of gross hospitality, and the table necessities were in keeping," observes the anti-knife and fork hostess; "I am not sure that the Chinese do not show exquisite taste in their use of chop-sticks."—[Argonaut.

A Hint to the Fair.

Half the badly shaped mouths that are the sorrows of the young women of today result from their being permitted when they were children to suck their fingers; one of the prettiest women in town has coarse thick lips, that came from having been allowed when she was going to sleep to put her thumb in her mouth, while another, whose lips protrude in the centre and whose mouth is large, blames her mother for allowing her to find consolation in her two forefingers. If persuasion will not break a child of this habit, then stronger means should be resorted to, and if necessary its hands should be tied together. Another very unfortunate habit among school girls, and which result in thickening the lips and making them supersensitive, is the continual biting of the lower lip. The entire shape of the face is spoiled in this way, for when nature moulded it there it was not the intention that the lower lip should be larger and a coarse look given to the face.—[Troy Times.

History of Lawn Tennis.

It is centuries old, this pretty and fascinating game of lawn tennis, which is so much the craze among our young people of today. More than 300 years ago, so the record tells, there were in Paris alone nearly 2000 tennis courts, and in England it has long flourished prodigiously. Its introduction here is of comparatively recent origin. An enthusiastic New Yorker contributes some interesting personal information for the benefit of tennis devotees. He calls attention to the fact not generally known even among tennis players, that among ladies Miss Adelaide Robinson is the champion of America. Miss E. Roosefelt holds second place, and Miss A. Smallwood third. Miss Robinson belongs to the Ladies' Outdoor Sports Club, of Staten Island, Miss Roosevelt lives at Poughkeepsie, and Miss Smallwood at Astoria, Long Island.

Miss Robinson is described as one who plays with great nerve and cool judgment. Without apparent exertion she is always where she should be in the game. She is proficient in every well known stroke and drives, lobs and volleys equally well. While playing, so absorbed is she in her game that she is wholly unmindful of her surroundings and seemingly unconscious of the applause which her brilliant play elicits.

Dr. James Dwight of Boston, it is thought, had the first set of tennis in this country and to have put up the first game at Nahant about 1873.

One can be provided with a good tennis outfit for about $30, but it is easily possible to go much higher than that. It is looked upon as a good thing that there is abroad a tendency to combine tennis and archery in programmes made up for open air diversion. The advantages are claimed to be numerous, for the two sports do not conflict: They can be in progress simultaneously and are radically different forms of exercise. In many minds archery is superior to tennis as exercise for women. It calls into play nearly all the muscles. It is said that the champion lady archer of this country is Mrs. Phillips, of Battle Creek, Mich.—[Detroit Free Press.

Fashion Notes.

Paris now ordains that stockings shall match the shoe instead of the costume.

Soft ties of surah silk are fashionable for little boys to wear with any summer costume.

Black socks are worn by tiny toddling children as well as those in lighter shades and white.

A loose cluster of white poppies with black hearts seems the foreordained garniture for black lace bonnets.

Patent leather pumps are worn by little girls as well as boys, but are not so pretty as the russet shoes worn last season.

Green's the wear, even for stockings—pale green, silk clocked with white, or shot green and white embroidered with both threads.

The soft woolen knitted suits for seaside wear are as sensible garments as were ever worn and will prove a blessing to mothers of children.

The Directoire styles bring some pretty striped silks, very heavy and rich in quality, which are made over plain surface shot silk petticoats.

A shade of blue which is very fashionable with white trimmings known as electric blue, is seen not only in wollen stuffs but in ginghams and the sheer and durable chambreys.

To have the least semblance of style, the sash must go twice around the waist, be deeply pointed in front, then encircle the hips in loose folds, and tie in a bow at one side or very low at front.

The Recamier style of hair dressing is in keeping with the directoire fashions, but a more trying coiffure could not possibly be devised for any but the most regular features and the most perfectly proportioned head.

Crepe spot cloth, of silk and wool, with double stripes, forming a raised spot at crossing, and laine et soie, line checks of white silk thrown upon a cream wool ground, are among the best of new stuffs for midsummer.

The white flannel skirts which were deemed so stylish when they first came, are found to be rather too easily soiled to be desirable for summer wear in the country, and not sufficiently dressy for driving on ceremonious occasions.

A daring modiste has introduced among her tea gowns the costume of modern Egypt's best society. It is loose and swathy, with flowing sleeves that give somehow the effect of a train and a girdle that is the height of elegant discomfort.

Wide hats of string or straw, very openly knotted and guiltless of lining, with a flower or two stuck on one side, are accounted wonderfully stylish; but it is suggested that if shade be their purpose, a cabbage leaf should be constructed to wear inside.

Vests of solid bead work take the place of little fancy wraps. They have sharp points both back and front, and pendant epaulettes. In bronze, steel and jet these are very stylish little garments and are used alike for house or for street wear, adding much to a simple toilet.

There are sailor suits in figured piques which are very attractive, and also sailor suits in linen duck of ecru shades, both of which are very stylish and elegant for dress suits for little children. The simplest forms are most stylish; a kilt skirt and a wide sailor collar on the blouse with no trimmings except a fancy belt are all that are needed as a finish.

Shaved By a Bullet.

General Stuart, as usual, greatly exposed his own person on horseback, by riding out of the wood into the open field, and I felt it my duty to say to him that, in my opinion he was not in his proper place as in a few minutes the whole fire of the enemy would be concentrated upon him.

But he was in a very bad humor and answered curtly that if this place seemed likely to become too hot for me I was at liberty to leave it; whereupon I made response that since my duty attached me to his side, no place could be too hot for me where he chose to go.

Nevertheless, I changed my position, and cautiously brought a large tree, in front of which I had been standing, between myself and the enemy.

In an instant the firing began, and three bullets struck the tree at just the height to show that, had I remained where I was they would certainly have gone through my body. Looking at Stuart I saw him pass his hand quickly across his face, and even at that serious moment I could not help laughing heartily when I discovered that one of the numberless bullets that had been whistling around him had cut off half of his beloved moustache as neatly as it could have been done by the hand of an experienced barber.—[Youth's Companion.

Apaches and White Bandits.

It has been discovered that the little band of Apache Indians who for the past two years have been committing depredations in Montezuma district, Sonora, Mexico, near the Chihuahua line, are led by two Americans named Red Murphy and West. Prof. Sherman who was attacked by the party a short time ago, saw them with a field-glass and recognized both men, who were in the same party a few days ago when it killed a mexican near the town of Bavispe, since which time it has been ascertained that the two Americans are the leaders. This band has been committing depredations in that vicinity ever since the surrender of Jeronimo, the Apache chief, and has committed many murders.—[San Francisco Examiner.

The Quinine Habit.

The quinine habit is gaining strength every day. Dizziness, that you hear innumerable people complaining of in these days, can be traced to excess in the use of quinine. The good effects, that it is nearly always certain of, are lost by excessive doses. Too much quinine will also produce congestion of the ear and vibration of the auditory nerve. The growing habit of taking quinine for neuralgia and other like ailments, without consulting a physician, is altogether reprehensible, and may lead to very serious results. Many cases of deafness are produced by overdoses and long-continued use of the drug.—[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Colored Seas.

It is a curious matter of interest to note that there are several large seas which are named from their color. The White Sea bears its name with perhaps the best reason of any. Its shores are covered with snow for the greater part of the year, and its frozen surface is for that time a snowy plain.

The Red Sea is also entitled to its name. Through its clear waters the reefs of red coral are clearly to be seen. Much of its rocky bed is the growth of the coral insect. Another reason, and probably the true one for the name of this sea, is the fact that along its eastern shore lies ancient Edom. This name signifies Red. It was given to the region not from the color of its sandstone hills, but from its people. These are the descendants of him who came in, faint and weary from hunting, and said to his brother, "Feed me, I pray thee, with that same red pottage, for I am faint; therefore was his name called Edom."

In the case of the Yellow Sea, its name is sufficiently accounted for from the appearance of its water. The sea receives a great deal of mud from the rivers of China. Moreover, it is shallow, and the sandy bottom gives its own color to the water a long way out from the shore.

The Black Sea affords us no intelligible account of its name. Its waters are not black, they are described as of a deep blue, like that which is seen in sunny weather off the southwestern shores of England.

A Time-Piece With a History.

Across the corridor from the roomy offices of Secretary Whitney is the compass-testing room of the Navy Department. I strolled in there today and saw two very interesting curios. One was a quaint, high-backed chair which had been used for years by Gideon Welles, who was the secretary of the navy in Lincoln's war cabinet. "Sit in it," said Lieut. Denfeld, "and I will show you the star attraction of the room." He unlocked a glass case and carefully uncovered an ordinary looking ship's chronometer. But its history was not at all ordinary. It had lain for four years in an Arctic cairn without receiving the faintest damage. It had been cached in the Arctic wilds in 1872 by members of the ill-fated Polaris expedition, and in 1876 it was found there by Her Majesty's ship Discovery. It was taken to London in due course, and later returned to the government of the United States. The report accompanying it states that the London testers discovered that the chronometer lost but one-tenth of a second per day, which was the loss statement in the rate paper of the American manufacturers. The officers of the British ship state that while they were there the mercury of the thermometer was frozen for forty-seven days, although on one day the mercury marked 104 degrees below freezing. This is considered to be the severest test ever borne by a time-marking instrument.

Smothering Flames with a Bare Hand.

John Smith, the Ford-street plumber, has been a terrible sufferer with his hands ever since the incipient fire next door to his shop, three weeks ago. It may be remembered that a gaspipe parted and the gas was accidentally lighted and a volume of flame poured into the room and would speedily have had the whole building in flames. Mr. Smith, with great presence of mind, and a disregard for personal consequences which few men would have shown, ran to the place and smothered the flames by deliberately placing the palm of his hands against the burning pipe. It was an effectual remedy, all danger being over before the firemen arrived. Naturally Mr. Smith's hands were horribly burned, and he has been a sufferer under the doctor's care ever since. People who appreciate bravery might remember that Mr. Smith is a good, honest plumber, who has enjoyed a good deal of hard luck with commendable pluck.—[Hartford Courant.

Origin of Drinking Toasts.

How the word toast should be used at the same time to name a plate of food and the drinking to the health or welfare of a person, is not without curious interest. We need go back only about two hundred years to find the use of tea and coffee almost unknown in England and in the colonies. Our ancestors of good substantial estate were accustomed to drink toasts at their meals as a regular beverage.

Slices of bread or the crusts of the family loaf were toasted at the fire until they were quite brown, and were then put into boiling water. This made a drink that was relished even without sugar.

Rye used to be roasted in the kernel for this purpose, and it was sold as "domestic coffee" at New England groceries not more than seventy-five years ago.—[Youth's Companion.

An Equine Home of Rest.

A home of rest for horses is a successful English scheme. The chief object is to give temporary rest to the horses of cab drivers and poor traders, who in most cases are obliged to keep their beasts at work until past help, when a timely holiday would restore the poor creatures. Every comfort and convenience is at hand to make life pleasant and easy to the old horses. Summer and winter boxes, large and airy, warm clothes, regular and plentiful meals, an extensive stable yard for winter exercise, and a splendid grass run is at their disposal; and if anything ails the ancient almoners, the veterinary surgeon of the society comes with his skill to their aid.

A bad, revengeful little boy rubbed fine Cayenne pepper all over the back of his jacket and well into the cloth, and then laughed out loud in school, for which the master flogged him severely, but dismissed school soon after to go and see an eye doctor.

A Question of Honesty.

Hon. Amos J. Cummings tells a funny story about a printer named Austin. While Cummings was setting type in the New York Tribune office a good many years ago Austin did "sub" work a spell. One day Austin said to Cummings: "This office is more honest than the Times office." "Why, because when I went out today I left an apple on my case, and when I came back, there it was, safe and sound; nobody had eaten it." "Well?" "Now, just to show you how different the Times printers are, while I was working there last week, one of the boys went off, leaving an orange on his case. I took it and ate it."—[Chicago News.

A Common-Sense Remedy.

In the matter of curatives what you want is something that will do its work while you continue to do yours—a remedy that will give you no inconvenience nor interfere with your business. Such a remedy is Allcock's Porous Plasters. These plasters are purely vegetable and absolutely harmless. They require no change of diet, and are not affected by wet or cold. Their action does not interfere with labor or business; you can toil and yet be cured while hard at work. They are so pure that the youngest, the oldest, the most delicate person of either sex can use them with great benefit.

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation.

Ask for Allcock's, and let no explanation or solicitation induce you to accept a substitute.

We find plenty of people who don't average well; they know too much for one man, and not quite enough for two.

A Business-like Offer.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The Remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. This wonderful remedy has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

The Early Reaped.

Flowers reaped early, while the dew
Is on them, day being new,
Know neither dust nor stain,
Or woe's refrain,
Or thirst:
Light kisses them the first,
And they are fair
Because untouched by earth's stain anywhere.

Lives reaped while life is new are pure,
Unsullied, bright, mature
In fairness, and replete
In all that makes remembrance sweet;
Redeemed
Before sin's sear its way hath seamed,
Or anguish scored its deep-drawn mark
Or dealt its thrust amidst the dark,
And they are fair
Because untouched by earth's stain anywhere.

A FEARFUL SIEGE.

The capital of Michigan had scarcely been changed from Detroit to Lansing before my father got the fever to go West. We were then living in New York State, and doing fairly well on a farm, but the talk about Michigan upset many a man who was then well enough off. I was 14 years old the day we left for the West—father, mother, four children, and a hired man. All of us, clear down to the baby, were enthusiastic and full of hope, and father was just the sort of man the Detroit land sharks were looking for. They sold him a swamp farm in Shiawassee county, and in one way and another, cheated and defrauded him, until we reached our destination with hardly a dollar to begin on. A span of horses and a cow constituted our live stock, and when father found how he had been duped, he lost heart entirely. The swindlers guaranteed forty acres of clearing and a good log house. The clearing was a lake, and the log house was a wretched affair, about sixteen feet square, which had been put up for some surveyors.

It is not, however, of our family troubles I am going to talk. Michigan was a great game country at that date, and we soon discovered that we had located pretty near headquarters. Inside of three days we had seen a panther, three wolves, a bear, a lynx, and an Indian devil. Our nearest neighbor was ten or twelve miles away, and the nearest village about twenty. We were dead stark alone in the midst of a great wilderness, and, aside from all other perils, the Indians, who were generally supposed to be peaceable, looked upon all pioneers with jealous eyes, and made their stay unpleasant in many ways. On the second day of our stay they stole our cow and ran her off into Ingham county, where we accidentally found her two years later; and inside of a week they made several attempts to get the horses. It was not until fired upon that they left us in peace, and then the wild beasts and reptiles took hold. Our hut stood within 200 feet of the edge of a great swamp, and the swamp was headquarters for rattlesnakes, blue racers, black snakes, bears, panthers, wolves and every other creature belonging to the country. During the first week of our stay we killed upward of a hundred snakes, most of them rattlers; and Gordon, the hired man, who was a good shot, killed a bear and three wolves.

Our adventures with the panthers were many and perilous, as the beasts seemed determined not to leave the locality. The first time I saw one my life was preserved in a most wonderful manner. We had been located about 10 days, and were clearing up a piece of land about a quarter of a mile from the house. Father was sick in the house, Gordon was off after a deer for meat, and I was in the clearing alone, having a light axe and cutting away at the small trees. The only thing I feared was the snakes, having been assured that no wild beasts would attack me by daylight. In cutting down a young beech tree it fell upon an iron wood in a way to break it off about 10 feet from the ground and leave the trunk badly splintered. This splintered trunk stood about 14 feet from a very large beech. I had noticed it only in a general way, as I had set myself a stint to do, and was working with much enthusiasm.

It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and I was bending over to examine a curious bug which was crawling at my feet, when a scream filled the woods, something hit and knocked me flat on my face, and next instant a wonderful situation was developed. A panther had sprung upon me from the large beech tree. The coward had no doubt been watching me for a long time and had waited for me to get my back to him. He meant to clear the splintered iron wood in his spring, but he did not quite succeed. He had struck me with his paw rolling me over but not hurting me to speak of, and as he came down his right hind foot caught between two great splinters and held him fast. Then I was treated to a circus. I was too scared to move and stood not more than ten feet away and witnessed what nobody ever saw before. The beast hung head downward in the air, clawing and spitting and yelling, and the harder he struggled the more securely was his foot imprisoned. Such screams and yells! Father and mother came rushing at once, supposing I was attacked, and an Indian who was hunting a mile or more distant was guided to the spot by the racket. The sharp claws sent splinters of wood flying all about and the lithe body bent and twisted like a snake. We had no gun, and father was too weak to venture to use the axe. We were, therefore, standing open-mouthed when the Indian came up and shot the panther through the head. He could not get the carcass until we had chopped the stub down and split it open with wedges.

A couple of weeks later a hunter came along who advised father to give up clearing for a year or two and trap and hunt. All sorts of furs had a fair cash value, and the state was paying a bounty on the scalps of wolves, bears and panthers. The Indian, who had taken the body of the panther off with him, had made $15 on its scalp. The hunter told us how to make rude traps and deadfalls, and the three of us were soon busy with the game around us. One day I found a path leading around the edge of the swamp, and the soil bore unmistakable proofs that wild beasts passed that way. We had heard the scream of panthers nightly, but I supposed the beasts which used this path were wolves. I had made a stout rope of hickory peelings, and at a favorable point on the path I bent over a stout sapling, attached my rope, and then noosed it and carried the trigger to a bush. What I wanted now was the bait, and Gordon furnished that in the shape of the fore-quarter of a deer he had killed that morning. When the trap was ready no animal could get at the bait without putting its head in the noose. I went to sleep that night counting on the scalp of a wolf, and next morning I was off as soon as I could see my way through the forest. It was well that I was not ten minutes earlier. I was within ten rods of the trap when I was stopped dead still by the screams of a panther. I knew the beast as soon as he yelled, and it was easy to conclude that he was in trouble. I crept forward very carefully, hearing a great thrashing about with the yells, and when I reached a point where I could see the path I saw that a big panther had noosed himself. The noose had caught him about the loins, so far back that he could not get at the rope to bite it, and the spring of the tree barely permitted him to touch the earth with his paws now and then.

If the other beast, trapped through his own carelessness, was mad, this fellow, who had become the victim of a put-up job, was furious. All the rage in his nature bubbled up as he dangled there and felt that his end was near. He was at a great disadvantage, of course, but his struggles were so violent that I became alarmed and ran away, knowing that if he got loose he would tear me to pieces. He was still fast when I returned with Gordon, and a bullet quickly put an end to his career. He was an old and a dangerous beast. When we came to skin him we found the point of a knife in his shoulder, and he had several scars made by the weapons of the Indians.

We did not catch sight of a panther for several weeks after this adventure, although never a night passed that we did not hear their screams. The weather had now come on warm, and we could do no more at trapping. Father fell very sick, and one day about the middle of June it became plain that he must have medical assistance at once. Gordon mounted one of the horses for a ride to the doctor's, a distance of twelve miles, and when night came he had not returned. It had scarcely grown dark when the wild beasts around us began to howl and roar and skulk about the house, and after catching sight of several wolves I went in and barred the door. There was only one opening for a window, and over this was nailed a blanket. It was high up from the ground, and only about two feet square. The horse was in a stout pen, and there was no fear that he could be got at. When night had fully settled down we were in a state of siege. Wolves to the number of forty or fifty surrounded the house, and growing bolder as time passed and their number increased, they made furious and repeated efforts to force an entrance. Gordon had taken the gun with him, but we had two axes in the house. Mother stood at the door with one and I defended the window with the other. The wolves gnawed a hole in the door, through which one could have passed but for her presence and the sharp-edged weapon she wielded. Every head stuck into the opening received a blow, and the baffled animals finally ceased their efforts at that point, although mother dared not leave the spot. After the wolves had worried us for an hour, without, however, having made much of an effort to get in by way of the window, it being too high for them, they left us all of a sudden. I then dragged a chest across the floor to stop the hole in the door, and mother discovered that father was dead. The poor man, weak as he was, had not been able to endure the fright of the attack. We did not have many minutes for lamentation. The wolves had given place to a more dangerous enemy. There was a sudden pounce on the roof over our heads, accompanied by a snarl, and we knew that a panther was at hand. It was a lucky thing for us that the builders of the hut were either lazy or in a hurry, and had built only a small fireplace and a small chimney. There was no fire on the hearth and had the chimney been the ordinary mammoth affair of the backwoods we should have had a panther on the floor in no time. The first was soon joined by a second and third, and then two or three others were heard on the ground. They may have scented the dead or they may have known nothing of our great calamity. That they were determined to get in we were soon led to understand. I made a smudge on the hearth to keep them from trying the chimney, and then mother took one side of the window and I the other. We instinctively felt that it was the point of danger now that the chest protected the door. We were hardly at our posts when a panther sprang up and tore the blanket down. Our light consisted of a piece of cotton lying in a dish of coon's fat, and at times the flame was almost out.

A couple of minutes after the blanket was torn away a panther sprang into the opening. Had he been left undisturbed he could have squeezed through, but the instant his head appeared we both struck at him. His right fore paw hung over the edge of the opening, and my blow cut it clean off and dropped it on the floor. That settled one of the visitors, although the row he made over the loss of his paw almost unnerved us. At that moment there seemed to be five or six of the beasts about, and it was only a short time before another sprang into the opening. Mother struck him square in the face, and five minutes later I severely wounded a third. That seemed to dampen the ardor of all, for they soon withdrew, and the wolves returned. It must have been that these creatures scented the dead. It was the first time they had appeared in such numbers and so boldly, and hunger could not have been the cause of it. They made little or no effort to get at the horse, but for an hour after their return they made desperate and determined efforts to break their way into the cabin. They came against the door, six or eight of them at once—with such force as to shake the house, and had not the lower log been sunk in clay ground they would have dug their way under.

It was midnight before we had a let-up, and the last wolf did not leave before 3 o'clock. Up to this time mother had not given way to her grief. When danger passed away she broke down, and from then to daylight I sat alone by the door with ax in hand. I looked for Gordon at an early hour, but he did not appear. About 10 o'clock the horse came home, bitten in a terrible manner, and so serious were his injuries that he died before night. We knew from the wounds inflicted on the horse that he had been pursued by wolves, and there was little doubt about the fate of his rider. We dared not start out in search of help, as we knew not which way to go, and we dared not leave the body of the dead in the house another night for fear of the wolves. We waited until 3 o'clock, and then, hearing nothing from Gordon, we dug a grave, wrapped poor father's remains in a sheet, and buried them as best we could. Next day some hunters called, and they went to look for Gordon. He had been to the doctor's, to find him too sick to come. On the way back he had been chased by a drove of wolves, and, while the horse had escaped, nothing but a few bones could be found of the man.—

Origin of a Popular Song.

Among the favorite songs of our day are some which originated under peculiarly curious circumstances. The familiar "Peek-a-Boo," which has been worn nearly threadbare, was, according to its author, Mr. Scanlon, an inspiration of the moment. It was suggested by the gambols of some children, who were playing around the door where he was sitting, idly picking out tunes upon an accordion. As the children peeped curiously into his door, he began to say "Peek-a-Boo," nodding his head at the same time. Unconsciously the instrument played a few notes to suit what he was saying and the idea of a new melody struck his fancy. He immediately wrote off the chorus of "Peek-a-Boo" upon an envelope and added a few stanzas afterwards, touching up the song at his leisure. The music came spontaneously and was far less difficult than the fitting of it with appropriate words; but as it was by no means his first experience, he was not long in getting it into proper shape.

It was certainly a happy inspiration for Mr. Scanlon. This melody alone has netted him $36,000 in royalties, and still brings in a comfortable income, as he receives six cents on each copy sold. It has, with his numerous other compositions, made him a fortune, in striking contrast with such writers as poor Stephen Foster and John Howard Payne, whose best work served only to enrich the publishers who were so fortunate as to obtain their entire control. —[Detroit Free Press.

The Phonozenograph.

The Duc de Feltre has designed an instrument, which he calls a phonozenograph, intended to indicate the direction of any distant sound. A microphonic plate of peculiar construction is fixed in a vertical plane, and is in circuit with a battery and a telephone receiver, or a Deprez-D'Arsonval-galvanometer and a Wheatstone bridge. The microphone is more or less affected by a distant sound, according to the angle that it makes with the source. By moving the plate about until the maximum effect is obtained the observer is enabled to exactly locate the direction of the sound. The indications of the telephone receiver are absolutely accurate, but those afforded by the galvanometer are less so, and this latter arrangement will require great modification of the microphonic plate before it can be said to be of a practical nature. This instrument may possibly prove of use at sea in preventing collisions in foggy weather.—[Electrician.

House of the Broken Goblet.

Not far from the place of execution, outside the Suhn Chee gate, in Pekin, China, there stands an old-fashioned tavern, which is generally known by the name of the "House of the Broken Goblet." Many years ago its former proprietor was tried and condemned to death, but afterward received a free pardon. Since that time every culprit, on being led to execution, receives at the door of this tavern as much wine as he likes to drink. He is given a goblet, and when he has drained it to the last drop, the vessel is solemnly dashed on the ground; hence the designation of the house.

FOR FARM AND GARDEN.

How to Make the Dairy Pay.

A well known writer on dairy matters says that the general average price of butter in a locality was pretty correctly gauged by the amount of dairy literature taken by those there engaged in dairying. It pays always to be intelligent even if it has to be paid for and exertion made to master the subject. Here are five rules, some of which may be of use:

1. Set out the milk quickly as possible after milking.
2. Skim off the cream before the milk gets thick.
3. Churn before the cream gets sour, i. e., slightly acid.
4. Wash out the buttermilk with weak brine.
5. Salt an ounce to the pound and pack in small packages.—[New York Herald.

Grasses for Meadows.

In mixing grasses for a meadow all the species used should come into bloom at the same time in order to secure them in the best condition for hay. But orchard grass and timothy do not come forward in spring at the same time, the former blooming nearly two weeks before the latter, consequently it must be cut much earlier to make good hay. Blue grass and red clover may be sown with orchard grass. Still we prefer to sow the latter alone than to mix any other kind with it. For pasture mixed grasses are preferable to any one species alone, because of the difference in season and growth. For light soils orchard grass is far superior to timothy as a hay crop, and with fair treatment it will last ten to fifteen years, and, with an occasional top dressing of manure, much longer.—[New York Sun.

The Economy of Feeding.

There are two things a farmer can never have enough of: One is feed, the other is manure. Feed obviously makes manure, for it enables the farmer to keep more cattle, and some can always be purchased cheaply in the fall or winter and make a good profit on the feeding. And for the manure some little can always be procured to absorb and mix with all the valuable excrementitious matter. Now the corn is planted, all the land left that can be worked should be prepared for millet for increasing the feed supply. It is a late crop, but one of the easiest to grow, and yields a large quantity of the very best feed. The land should be prepared and half a bushel of seed sown per acre. The seed is covered by light harrowing. Immediately after sowing late in June or early in July, (we prefer to sow in June), timothy and clover may be sown and a good stand of grass secured. A fair yield of the millet will be three tons of the very best hay per acre, if the crop is cut when the blossom first appears, and the hay is not exposed to the sun more than half a day before it is put in cock for complete curing.—[New York Times.

Turnips for Hogs.

The days are gone when cheap pork can be made from corn alone. Our hogs would be less liable to disease, and make healthier meat if less corn was given them. A good clover pasture, fresh water, and a little mill stuff will keep hogs in good growing condition during the summer; add to this plenty of skim milk and you have good rations for brood sows and young pigs.

For fall and winter feeding and fattening we need more than this. What shall it be? Have you ever tried turnips? They are easily grown and as they will do well even if sown late, they can be raised upon ground from which one crop has been taken. The better the tilth of the land the better the crop. It will pay to use care in preparing the ground and in sowing the seed. Large yields of turnips can be obtained at little expense, as the seed is cheap (or you can raise it yourself in time to use each year), and the amount of labor absolutely needed to insure a good crop is small, after preparation of ground. We advise all who have never tried turnips as a pork producer to put in some next month and give them a trial this fall and winter. Mr. F. D. Curtis is a firm believer in and an earnest advocate of turnips as a food for all kinds of hogs, store, stock and fattening. As a wholesome food, and in the interest of cheap pork raising, he has urged farmers to use them.—[Farm, Field and Stockman.

Roaring in Horses.

Mr. F. Raymond of the Royal Horse Infirmary, Woolwich, England, has announced that successful experiments have been made in the surgical treatment of horses for the grave defect in respiration known as "roaring"—a defect which appears to be on the increase, and which often renders valuable horses almost, if not quite valueless. The operation has been devised by Dr. Fleming, principal veterinary surgeon of the army, who for some years has made a special study of the morbid conditions which give rise to the impediment in breathing that causes such distress and noise. It consists of an operation on the larynx for the removal of the obstruction. Under his direction Mr. Raymond has recently operated upon two army horses which were to have been cast for "roaring," and in one case complete, and in the other almost complete, success seemed to have been attained. A great advantage of Fleming's method is that the animal suffers no pain, being chloroformed; nor does it experience any immediate subsequent inconvenience in eating, drinking, or breathing. The horses operated upon were watered and fed in the usual way as soon as they recovered from the narcotic; so that even if the operation chanced to be unsuccessful, the animal is no worse than before. The scar which remains is very small and not noticeable. Mr. Raymond predicts that Fleming's method of laryngotomy will take a position among the most useful in veterinary surgery.—[Scientific American.

Boys, don't skip any hills in hoeing.

Bran will pay the milk seller, but oats the butter maker.

The style of the package has much to do with the selling price of butter.

If the pasture lacks shade trees a shelter of some sort should be put up.

Ticks are much easier to get rid of immediately after shearing than at any other time.

Keep the fowls clean, well-fed, well-housed, and free from vermin, and they will lay eggs.

It will pay you to give milk cows a small ration of good timothy hay each night during the summer.

Land that has been affected by corn "smut" or ergot had best be seeded. It is the most effectual remedy.

The habit of putting each tool where it belongs as soon as it has been used, will help much in these busy days.

Use the horse and cultivator among the hoed crops until you have done all you can in that way. You cannot afford to dig up sods with a hoe in these times.

You can't make a success of dairy farming unless you know how many pounds of milk and butter each individual cow in your herd can produce in a year.

In fighting lice the point of attack should be not the hen but the poultry house. If the house is cleared of lice the hen will keep herself clean with the dust bath.

Never, when setting a hen, fail to give her a good dusting in sulphur and road dust. An uneasy hen on a setting of valuable eggs is not a profitable investment.

All receptacles for extracted honey, even those new, should be well rinsed with pure, cold water, and, after well dried, waxed, if of wooden structure, before using.

An enthusiast says that the silo will make dimples on the faces of a good many dairymen, and that if they fill the silo according to the latest light on the subject they will never regret it.

To prevent bees robbing one another's hives, contract the entrance to the smallest space possible, as it compels the robbers to pass in singly, thus enabling the bees inside to repel them.

There are little things which affect the quality of butter which is not easy to explain to others. Good judgment is a quality not transmissible on paper.

Four quarts of finely ground cornmeal or of a mixture of bran and cornmeal may be given every day to a cow on pasture. If the milk is sold and not made into butter, buckwheat bran may be given instead of cornmeal.

The essence of all profitable bee keeping, says Father Langstroth, is contained in the golden rule, "Keep your stocks strong." If you cannot succeed in doing this, the more money you invest in bees, the heavier will be your losses.

Professor E. S. Goff tells in the Rural New Yorker that he is unable, after a comparative test, to detect any difference in efficiency between London purple and Paris green as an insecticide, and London purple is commercially much the cheaper of the two.

English farmers, as a class, keep no regular accounts. Chalk marks on the backs of doors or scattered notes in memorandum books are the usual means of telling farmers how they stand. It would be interesting to know how many American farmers understand and employ the art of book-keeping.

The ashes from a lime kiln in which wood is used for fuel are of considerable value as a fertilizer. When composted with straw the straw should be put up in layers with the ashes and exposed to the weather or thoroughly wetted, when they would decompose very rapidly and make valuable manure.

When a cow leaks her milk it indicates weakness of the strictor muscles which close the milk duct. Apply strong decoction of tanbark or alum to the end of the teat when the milking is finished, and then put a little photographer's collodion over the opening. This contracts as it dries and draws the muscles so as to close the orifice.

A Mighty Mass of Steel.

The sternpost of the San Francisco, "Cruiser No. 5," which was cast, and, so far as known, successfully, at the Union iron works, will weigh something more than 21,000 pounds, exceeding the weight of the sternpost of the Charleston by 6000 pounds. Something like 30,000 pounds of molten steel was run into the great mold constructed in the floor of the casting-room, which allowed, of course, for a considerable overflow, which is always deemed advisable. It will take fully a week to cool the great mass of iron sufficiently for examination, but so far as known the casting was successful.—[San Francisco Examiner.

Grand Lawn Party.

The Weymouth Improvement Association announces in another column the particulars of the grand lawn party to be given next Thursday evening, in Stetson's grove, for which extensive preparations are being made. The pleasures of the lawn party given last season were marred by the advent of a heavy shower, and to ensure protection to patrons from rain, the committee have obtained a mammoth tent, under which the entertainment will be given. The Spanish Students Quintette have never before appeared in this town and their delightful music will be a charming as well as a novel feature of the entertainment. The large platform to be erected will provide ample room for dancing, and the supper to be provided will be abundant and toothsome. The committee are laboring earnestly to make the party a great success, and the public will assuredly respond to their efforts by a large attendance. The object of the association is the promotion of the public good, and as the expense of the party will be much increased by provision of tent and platform, every one who can attend should endeavor to be present, and make the party a financial success.

The New Water Main.

Last week a survey of two routes for a direct water main from South Weymouth to the Landing village was made by the Water Board, and it was found that the laying of the main down Front street would require the excavation of the ledge between the Tirrell place and Reed cemetery, 200 or 300 feet in length, to a depth of 16 feet, and it was decided to connect with the gravity service at the crossing on Main street, and continue down that street to the Federal street connection, a distance of over a mile. The pipe will be eight inch, and is being carted by Messrs. Cushing of East Weymouth. The work of laying the pipe was commenced Monday morning last, and the service pipes will be put in wherever required by water takers, as the line advances. The labor is being done by town's people, and will probably require several months time to complete it.

The board have in consideration the relaying of the pipe from Federal street to Congress street, which is six inch, replacing it with an eight inch, which would be a still further benefit to the Landing water takers.

Obituary.

Col. John W. Thomas, a native of Weymouth, and who served this town as a Representative in the Legislature for two years, afterward being appointed as Sheriff of Norfolk county, which position he filled most acceptably for twenty-one years, died in Dedham last Friday, at the age of 73 years. For ten years past he had been a great sufferer with acute rheumatism, being obliged to resign his office in consequence. He leaves a widow, son and daughter. Col Thomas was one of the original supporters of the Republican party, and was one of its most zealous and active promoters in its early days. He was widely known and respected, and his many friends throughout the State are saddened by the intelligence of his death. The funeral took place at Dedham last Tuesday, and there was a large attendance. The remains were laid in a handsome casket, covered with black broadcloth. Floral tributes were in profusion, and the Temple quartette rendered several hymns. The services were conducted by Rev. Chas. M. Southgate of Worcester, who dwelt at length on the many good qualities of the deceased. The following named gentlemen acted as pall bearers: Sheriff Augustus B. Endicott, Deputy Sheriffs Abram C. Paul and Geo. W. White, Hon. F. D. Ely, Hon. Asa French, Erastus Worthington, Henry White and H. O. Hildreth. The interment took place in the village cemetery at Dedham. Among other county officials present were Judge George White of the Norfolk probate court, John L. Burdakin, registrar of Norfolk deeds, and C. C. Churchill, county treasurer.

Fire Department.

The following act, passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts during the session of 1888, will be read with interest by the members of the fire department of Weymouth:

[Chap. 310.]

An Act to require the equipment of fire departments with apparatus for the saving of life at fires.

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

Sect. 1. Every city and town having a fire department established and organized according to law shall provide and keep, as a part of the equipment of such department, one or more of each of the following pieces of apparatus, and when any such city or town is divided into fire districts and only the fire department within any such district responds to a first alarm of fire therein, one or more of each of such pieces of apparatus shall be provided and kept in each such district: First, a gun or other suitable device capable of shooting or throwing an arrow or other missile, with a cord attached thereto, over the top of or into the window of any building within such city or town, together with all needful appliances for properly working the same; second, a "chute," so called, made of canvass or other suitable material, rendered uninflammable, of sufficient length to reach, at a proper angle of inclination, from the ground to any window in any such building, said chute being provided with proper means of fastening the upper end thereof and having a flexible ladder attached thereto; and third, a "life net" or "jumping-net," so called, suitable for breaking the fall of a person jumping from the top story of any such building. In every city and town subject to the provisions of this section one or more of each of the above named pieces of apparatus shall be taken to every fire occurring therein in a building over two stories in height.

Sect. 2. The proper authorities of the several fire departments shall see that the above named pieces of apparatus are kept at all times in good condition and ready for immediate use, and that a sufficient number of firemen are periodically practised and trained in the proper handling and use of the same.

Sect. 3. Any city or town violating the provisions of this act shall be subject to a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars.

Sect. 4. This act shall take effect on the first day of November in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight. [Approved May 9, 1888.]

Generous Offer.

J. D. Scudder, Esq., the popular Sup't at Downer Landing, generously granted the free use of Melville Garden to the children who are stopping at the country home which the young ladies of Hingham have provided for poor young girls of the city, and in addition to the day's outing at that lovely shore resort furnished them with a bountiful dinner.

Death.

The many Weymouth friends of Rev. James O'Brien, formerly pastor of the Catholic church in Randolph, have been saddened by his death at Cambridge last Monday, after a short illness, at the parochial residence of St. Peter's church, of which he was the pastor for 12 years.

The Railroad Commissioners made their annual inspection of the line of the railroad last Friday, being accompanied by railroad officials.

Many visitors to Nantasket complain of the dusty condition of the road along the shore, which needs frequent watering for the comfort of visitors.

Funeral Service.

The remains of the late Jeremiah Coakley, whose death was announced last week, were taken to the Catholic church last Sunday, where the burial service was observed, a large number of friends of the deceased being present. Division 6, A. O. H., of Weymouth, of which he was a member, were present in a body, also a good number of Div. 9, of East Weymouth. The Weymouth Band had been engaged to furnish music for the march of the Divisions to St. John's Cemetery, Quincy, but owing to the rainstorm which prevailed the parade was given up, and carriages taken, there being four hacks and 48 carriages in the procession. The new glass side hearse of Messrs. Ford & McCormick, who were the undertakers, was used on this occasion.

The pall bearers were W. H. Condrick, James Casey, John O'Connor, John Garrity, W. S. Garde and William Lane. The County Delegate of the A. O. H., John L. McKeever, was also present.

The floral tributes were profuse and among them was a harp appropriately inscribed. The deceased leaves no parents, but a brother and sister survive him.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a special meeting of Division 6, A. O. H., of Weymouth, Mass., held July 21, 1888, the following resolutions on the death of our late Bro. Jeremiah Coakley were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Almighty God, in His wisdom, has deigned to remove from our midst Brother Jeremiah Coakley,

Resolved, That we, his late brother members of Division 6, A. O. H., while submissively bowing to the will of Divine Providence, express our deep regret at the demise of a brother unsurpassed in his devotion to the principles of our organization.

Resolved, That while mourning our loss, we sincerely sympathize with his brother and sister in their great sorrow, and unite our prayers with them for the happy repose of his soul.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of our deceased brother a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed, be presented to the family and also entered upon the record of this Division, and published in the Weymouth Gazette and Sentinel.

The Evening Sail

Provided by the Monatiquot Yacht Club for the entertainment of lady friends, took place last Friday evening, and though the light of the moon was somewhat dimmed by the clouds which gathered thickly at times, the sail was very enjoyable, a refreshing breeze wafting the yachts over the inside course in agreeable style. The several yachts passed in review of Commodore J. F. Sheppard, on the Folly, and the sail continued for an hour or more, the following guests being participants:

Yacht Folly, Commodore Sheppard. Guests, the Misses Sheppard, Miss Linton, Miss Alice Linton, Mrs. A. L. Hobart, Miss Alice Blanchard, Miss Pierce, Miss Margery Pierce, Mr. A. W. Blanchard, Mr. J. T. B. Hunt, Mr. C. F. White.

After the boats had returned to the clubhouse Prof. E. S. Hunt entertained the company with a fine display of fireworks, and dancing and refreshments followed.

Match Races.

Messrs. Sheppard, Hunt and Linton, owners of the yachts Folly, Posy and Secret, of the Monatiquot Yacht Club, have arranged for a series of five match races between the three yachts, the course to be five miles to windward and return, to be sailed on the inside course or at Fort Point or Hull, one race to be sailed each week, at 12 m. Com. Sheen of the Quincy club, is referee, and Mr. E. P. Worster, of Weymouth, timekeeper. The first race was sailed last Wednesday, the course being from Quincy Point to Seal Rock buoy, off Hull, and return, the distance being 10 miles. Owing to the illness of the skipper, the Posy did not enter, and it being very calm the race between the Folly and Secret could not be finished in the prescribed time.

Attractive.

The rustic fountain erected on Garfield square has become an object of much interest and attraction to residents of other towns who have visited this place and speak in praise of its beauty. As a work of art it reflects great credit upon the designer, Dr. William F. Hathaway, and it is hoped that the small deficit of money needed to meet the expense will be promptly subscribed. A public work of this kind is not only a measure of utility as a water convenience, but the beauty of its construction is an attraction which may aid in inducing people from other places to locate here.

Working Boys Home.

Rev. Fr. John F. Ford, a native of Weymouth, will preach in the Catholic church at the Landing next Sunday, at 10 a. m., and will speak in behalf of the Working Boys Home, of Boston, of which he is the Superintendent. The Home is one of the largest charities in the city, its work being to succor destitute boys who have no home or parents to provide for them, the number in the institution being quite large, and funds being needed to continue its work, the charitably disposed residents of Weymouth will have an opportunity to aid the home by bestowal of their money in the collection which will be taken up after the sermon, for this especial purpose.

Pogies.

A dashing young gentleman of some six summers received a present last week in the shape of a "box hat," and putting it upon his curly head he took a walk to Mr. Freeman Whitmarsh's. A load of pogies in the boat being distributed among the visitors, our young man was not forgotten, and nothing being at hand to properly carry the fish in, with the true American spirit never to refuse that which would be either useful or ornamental, he put them in his box hat and carried them home.

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

It will be remembered that about a year ago Master Herbert Ferris, a young lad of this village, met with a serious accident, necessitating the amputating of one of his legs above the knee and since being able to get out he has had to go on two crutches. The young lad is a good, active boy and scholar, and in consideration of his unfortunate condition, Mr. David Ford, one of our most enterprising citizens, always ready to help those who need the charity and sympathy of others, took it upon himself last week to try and raise by subscription in Old Spain a sufficient sum of money to purchase young Ferris an artificial leg. He started out on his mission of mercy, and like a Napoleon fully determined to make his object a success, called on everybody, old and young, and in two days of persevering work raised $135. The artificial limb will cost $100 and has to be lengthened once a year until the lad is done growing; so the sum raised will keep the limb its proper length as long as will be needed. Mr. Ford has the hearty congratulations of the community for his success in so worthy an object.

Mr. John Binney, one of our oldest and honored citizens, and a veteran of the rebellion, is receiving the congratulations of his numerous friends for his success in securing a pension, which, as I am informed dates back twenty-five years. Mr. Binney has not been able to do any work for a long time and now with this reward for service rendered as a brave soldier in the late war he can sit under his own vine and fig tree and have everything to make him comfortable the few years he may be permitted to remain in our midst.

A Dream Proved True.

A lady resident of this village a few days ago laid her spectacles on the table with her work, as she supposed, and left the room to attend to other duties, but on looking for her glasses an hour later they could not be found. The night following she dreamed that her spectacles had fallen out of the window through a hole in the screen, into a bed of flowers. When she awoke she thought of the vision and lighting a lamp she went out as directed in her dream, when to her great surprise and joy there lay the glasses just as she had dreamed.

An item appeared in the Gazette last week from North Weymouth, in relation to the selling of the Active engine to parties from Connecticut, saying they had bought the machine, but had not appeared with the cash. "N. M." was not the author of that item. The same parties were here again last Friday afternoon and Engineer Collyer had the Active taken out of the house to a reservoir that the parties might see her work. There was no regular company, but the engine was worked by those who kindly volunteered, and was found to be in as good condition as in former days, when she brought home the silver trumpet, besides other prizes. The engineers from Conn. were highly pleased with the easy working of the machine and agreed to take her, saying the cash was ready when they took the machine. They saw the item in last week's paper and were very much displeased with such a report, reflecting on their ability to pay for the engine. Reporters should be careful in writing their items.

The meeting called to raise money for the improvement of the park was held Wednesday evening in the engine house. Hon. John A. Holbrook was chosen moderator and Augustus Beals was chosen scribe. This committee is now circulating subscription papers, and is meeting with good responses.

Mr. R. L. Hunt's cottage at Rose Cliff, North Weymouth, has been occupied for the last two weeks by Mrs. S. P. Hoyt of Old Orchard, Me., Miss K. I. Land of Roxbury, and Miss L. F. Bagley of Weymouth. They have entertained a number of guests, among them Mr. N. G. Snelling and family of Boston, manager of the clearing house. Saturday evening, July 21, they gave the first hop of the season, and Sunday evening a very enjoyable concert of vocal and instrumental music was given at the cottage of Mr. M. C. Nash by Mr. Charles E. Abbott of South Easton, baritone and flute soloist; Mr. William T. Abbott, violin soloist; Miss Ernestine Zimmermann of Hyde Park, contralto; Miss L. F. Bagley, elocutionist. A first-class entertainment was presented and Mr. Abbott's and Miss Zimmermann's solos and duetts were especially fine. About thirty of the resident cottagers were present on each evening. On Monday evening the ladies gave a progressive euchre party, on Wednesday evening a Chinaman's party, and this, Friday, evening they wind up their two week's outing with a progressive euchre party.

For a little over a month she had suffered with an affection of the throat and came home last week from the Black Rock House, where she was stopping, to have an operation performed. Although successful, the operation could not save her life and she passed away sooner than her friends expected. Miss Tirrell was about seventy years of age and leaves a comfortable property. The blow came most severely to an aged mother, now in her ninety-first year. The funeral occurred Thursday afternoon at 3.15 o'clock and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends. Rev. Mr. Bolster conducted the services and singing was furnished by a select quartette, consisting of Mrs. Fanny Sprague Foster, Miss Ella Clark, Mr. Foster and Mr. Fred Clark. 16 CENT PANT STRETCHER

16-CENT PANT STRETCHER,

Is positively the BEST invention ever known for taking Wrinkles out of Pantaloons, and shaping the bottoms of the same to fit nicely over the shoe.

Pantaloons should always be suspended as shown in cut when not in use. Even those in daily wear should be thus suspended through the night.

HOW TO APPLY THE STRETCHER.

Take the front bottom part of the pants in the left hand, taking the pointed end of the stretcher in the right hand, insert the wood part up the back of the leg about three-quarters of an inch, then spring the pin point into the front about half an inch from the edge. Pantaloons that are badly wrinkled or bagged at the knee should be dampened. A good way to do this is to hang them out by the stretcher in the evening, or on a damp day.

Temperance Lecture.

Mrs. Helen M. Rice, whose work in the cause of temperance has been most efficient, and who is a very eloquent and earnest speaker, delivered an address last Sunday evening in the Union church, on the subject of temperance, the attendance being rather small, on account of the rain. The meeting was opened with the singing of an anthem by the choir; prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Stratton, of Andover; singing of hymn read by Rev. Mr. Hyde; Scripture reading by Rev. Mr. Axtell. A vocal solo was rendered by Miss Edith Linton in excellent manner, and Rev. Mr. Pitts then introduced the speaker of the evening with brief remarks.

Mrs. Rice's address was devoted to a review of the aim and work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and in commencing her remarks she said that no thoughtful person can doubt that intelligent sentiment on the liquor question was never so strong as now. It is the great question to be settled by the American people, and among the organizations for carrying on the work is the W. C. T. U. The aim of this organization is that Christ shall be this world's king. Christ reigns supreme in some hearts. Does he in yours? Christ reigns in some homes. Is it so in yours? Christ reigns in the church, but how about the business world? When we look at the life of our government, can we say that Christ reigns as He should, in a state that bears the shame of a license law, or in a nation that sanctions this iniquity?

You may ask why we women of the white ribbon do not carry on our work in the lines appointed by the church. I shall tell you that we have noted the fact that for every church there are twelve saloons, and for every minister twelve men dealing liquid death and destruction; that for the few who attend church there are hundreds that crowd the beer gardens and summer resorts. Do you wonder that while we remain loyal to the church we preach the gospel of temperance together with the gospel of Christ? If you ask why these women do not try to win the world to Christ by going to the mission fields, I will tell you that we have heard the cry of the missionaries for the abolishment of this liquor curse. Will not heathen Africa rise up against christian England and condemn her in the last great day for introducing this poison into her territories?

In this 19th century the Lord has called his reserve forces, the women, to aid in the battle. The long pent-up mother love found expression in the Ohio Crusade, and this W. C. T. U. is only an organized protest of the mothers of this land against a trade which is ruining their children. We have not underestimated the strength of the foe, but we know under whose banner we have enlisted; we know who is our captain, and under His name we go on to victory. The liquor traffic counts God out, but we count Him in. What do we propose as a remedy for this evil in our midst? We have searched our Bible, but we find no warrant for a compromise. Some say let us regulate this traffic. We imported regulation from the other side of the water, and have tried it for four hundred years, and it has proved a miserable failure. You cannot regulate anything that is wholly bad. Some say, let us use lighter drinks, as is done in other countries; but we hear the cries from these same countries for better legislation on this subject. Some say, try local option. This is good as far as it goes, for it has the principle of prohibition, and this principle the Temperance Union will ever support. I want to congratulate you people of Weymouth for the good work you have done along the line of local option, but would it not be a comforting thought if the work you did last March had been final work? Some one has truly said of local option, "It is too local and too optional." I do not need to say that our remedy is simply prohibition of the traffic, and we shall never cease our work as long as there remains a saloon under the protection of a license. If any one says it is impossible to carry out prohibition, if voted, we reply that God is able to carry out all His purposes, and can we say it is impossible to abolish a trade that ruins both body and soul?

Now what are the women doing? They saw that the liquor interest is strongly banded together, and they said we must meet organization with organization. In every state and territory you will find women banded together in these Unions and their cornerstone is prayer. Does this fact mean anything to the liquor traffic? The President of the Illinois Liquor League said recently that there is no power in this country that the liquor traffic fears as it does the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We soon saw that it was useless to work, if our children were allowed to come up without temperance instruction and enthusiasm, so we organized the Loyal Temperance Legion—a band of children. Wherever boys and girls come in to the field of action we shall see a different state of affairs. We saw that some time must elapse before our children could be active workers in the cause, and to fill the space we organized the young ladies of this land, and they have laid their gifts on the altar of consecration. We have reached out to the women of foreign lands and organized temperance unions among them. We have met men of all classes with the gospel of Christ and of temperance. I think you will bear me out in saying that the women are doing all that they can. What will you do to help us? Will you bring gifts, and above all, your prayers, and back of your ballots give the honest conviction of your hearts on this question?

And now we come back to the word with which we started. We should try to enthrone Christ as King. I have described one way in which this may be done. I do not see how any woman can remain outside. I think there should be a branch of the Union here, and also a branch of the Loyal Legion for the children. Once Christ walked upon this earth, and perhaps we have all felt that we would gladly have followed Him. He has gone up on high, but He has left word with us how to work for Him. There are sin sick souls that you and I may help, and so merit the Master's commendation; but unless we bestir ourselves I sometimes fear that we shall merit only His reproof—"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

BASE BALL.

On the "clear field" last Saturday afternoon, the Weymouths achieved another victory—this time over the Resolutes of Boston (white). The visitors had for a pitcher, Martis, formerly of the Boston Blues, and lately of the Randolphs; but our boys had their eyes on the ball, and the Resolutes had some tall leather hunting. The game was devoid of interest owing to numerous errors committed by the visiting club at critical moments. Special mention of good plays by the pitcher Martis, 3d base man Driscoll and Toohig the short stop, should not be omitted.

For our boys "Clay" made one run, had one put out and struck out 11 men; "Tab" put out 7, and assisted 3; Tirrell made 3 runs and put out 3; Henry Griffin made three runs and put out one and had one assist; Keefe made three runs, Martin made one run and put out two; Griffin, 1st base, made one run and put out 10; Colcord made three runs, put out three—and assisted three out; Ryan made 2 runs and assisted three out. Our boys stole twelve bases—Tirrell 2, H. Griffin 3, Keefe 1, Griffin 1, Colcord 2, Ryan 3. Resolutes stole 2 bases, both by Pinkson, 2d base.

Earned runs, Weymouths, 4; Resolutes 1.

Score, Weymouths, 15; Resolutes, 9.

The game was prolonged to two hours and 35 minutes by kicking, mostly by the Resolutes. A large gathering witnessed the game, many faces from East Weymouth being seen among them. A collection taken up netted the snug little sum of $11.10. After the game, with his usual generosity the visitors having been furnished with some good smokers, Mr. A. L. Hobart drove them to North Braintree depot, in time to catch the train. Tomorrow afternoon the game will be called at 3.30 p. m. Wright & Moody nine, of 163 Columbus avenue, will oppose our volunteers. Wright & Moody's nine have not been defeated this season, and are very confident of success; but if Hart and Shea will only repeat their last two games, we know that the other seven will keep up their ends, and the visitors will find more than a fair match.

The management would say that as the Wright & Moody nine represents something very sweet, their attendance is most respectfully invited. They are chocolate caramels, etc.

The Weymouths are greatly in need of suits and a chest protector, which they should have, to make a respectful appearance, and they are worthy of them. VOL.

To Non-Church Goers.

Since coming to Weymouth I have noticed that a great many people stay away from the services of God's house. In fact, I think I was never in a place where such a proportion absent themselves as here. "With malice toward none and with charity for all," I would like to say a few words to these people, and if they will kindly read what I here offer for their consideration I will try to do them no harm.

Supposing that everybody should neglect attending church, then the churches would all have to be shut up. But is one person under more obligation to attend church than another? If people are situated so they can go I think not, for the following reasons:

Everybody is bound to minister to the good of the community in which he lives. Church attendance helps in that line. Take the churches out of a place and, I.—You hurt its business interests. A shrewd business man once said to me: "Although I am not a religious man, yet I attend church and help support it, because I know the church helps me in my business. I can do a larger business and am more sure that my debtors will pay me than would be the case if there were no churches in this place." I do not grant that that is the highest motive for attending church, but it would do no harm for business men to look into the matter from this point of view and see if these things be so. Take the churches out of this place and I am sure business men would feel the loss sensibly. Property would depreciate and many people would move out of town to other towns where they could find churches for their own attendance and Sabbath schools for their children. My business friend, remember this, that churches are not charity institutions, but that they are as necessary as schools and stores and manufactories.

II.—Take the churches out of a place and you hurt its educational interests. When the Pilgrim Fathers came here they planted first a church and then a school-house along by its side. The two have flourished together and under the same fostering influence. Do you know that out of the nearly 400 colleges in this country almost all were planted and have been nourished by these same neglected churches?

III.—Take the churches out of a place and you hurt its moral interests. Vice needs to be exposed and battled. Let it alone and it becomes rampant at once. Is it not exposed and battled from the rostrum of the pulpit? Do not the ministers of this country, generally, lift their voices as best they can in favor of honesty and temperance and chastity and righteousness?

A few years ago Leadville, Col., was called "the wickedest city in America." It was not until after churches had been established there that it became changed, and now it is a city of a different character. It seems to me the duty of every person who is so conveniently situated he can do so to attend church, not only for the benefit it will be to the community in which he lives, but for the benefit it will be to himself. Church going has a tendency to excite holy thoughts, high aspirations, noble endeavors. It calls our attention to, and makes us familiar with, God's word, which we ought to heed, because it reveals to us God's will concerning us, and points out the path of life in which we ought to walk.

If a man is convinced he is nothing but an animal, then I do not know as church attendance would help him much. But not many are willing to admit that. The most of us believe that we have souls. If so, do they not need spiritual cultivation? The sanctuary is a wonderful means of stimulus and help to such cultivation. "Strength and beauty are in his sanctuary."

People also find much comfort in time of trouble in the house of God—we all have sorrows and we need sympathy. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." The Lord's servants ought to feel, and I think the most of them do feel, the deepest sympathy for those in trouble, whether they attend church or not. We are ready to minister to them, and to carry them on the wings of prayer to the bosom of the Father who pities us so. We do wish sometimes, however, that they would come into God's house and find that

"Here speaks the Comforter, tenderly saying Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal."

Various objections are raised to church attendance, some of which I would like to notice. One says "I work so hard during the week and get so tired I feel I must rest." I know men do get tired with work, and I sympathize with them. I would not do anything to increase their weariness. But it seems to me one or two hours spent sitting in an upholstered pew in the house of God ought not to tire one very much. A great many hard-working people do it and do not complain. The Catholic population is mostly of the working class, and yet what a church going people they are. Another says, "I do not like the minister, and therefore do not care to hear him preach." It is a pity that we are not all Beecher's or Spurgeon's in eloquence, but we are not, and we have to do the best we can. The most of us do, however, try to preach that which is truthful and helpful, and in a kindly spirit.

Let us see how this objection works with other classes of people. You have children to send to school, but you do not like their teacher. Do you keep them out of school because of that? Or you do not like your grocer or physician, but you employ them all the same, or when they become unendurable you employ others. In this you are sensible. Why should you not act with equal sense in the case under discussion. If you find your minister unendurable seek out another and patronize him. I am not pleading that all the people of this place attend my church. Our doors are open and we should be glad to welcome any that care to come in, but there are other churches here whose doors are also open. It seems to me that every person in this village might find in one of them a satisfactory church home—a home where he can obtain for himself and family spiritual rest and refreshment and stimulus. In behalf of all these churches I would say: "Come thou with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel." E. T. PITTS.

Harrison Medal.

Horace M. Hamilton has one of the Harrison medals which he has had in his possession for 48 years. The medal is of brass and was given him by his father, who was an old line Whig. Upon one side is a picture of Gen. Harrison, dressed in the costume of the times, and the words "Maj. Gen'l W. H. Harrison, born Feb. 9, 1773." On the other side is a log cabin with the words "The people's choice in the year 1840."

COMER'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE,
666 WASHINGTON STREET,
Corner of Beach Street, BOSTON, MASS
GN-15-3m

Special Justice Granville E. Pratt, of the District Court, has filed his report of the inquest on the death of Nathan T. Joy, of East Weymouth, which says—

"The evidence shows that the employes of the railway company in charge of the train, did not discover the carriage until within 10 feet of it; that the train was then running at a moderate rate of speed (without steam), and the carriage was on the track. Said Commercial street is one much travelled. No evidence was produced indicating either due care or want of care on the part of the deceased. I find from the preponderance of testimony that the whistle was sounded and bell rung for 80 rods from said crossing, though the evidence as to the whistle was controverted by testimony worthy of much respect and consideration. I further find that for the last four or five years this crossing has been guarded by gates established and maintained by said company, at which a gateman has been stationed from the arrival of the early morning train to 7.45 o'clock p.m. (in summer later); but no gateman or flagman was on duty at the time of this accident, and that the gates were then unused. I further find that five trains in summer and four trains of said company at all other times, passed daily the point of the accident, after said gateman left duty.

"I trust I do not exceed the proper limits of this inquest in the suggestion that the danger of a grade crossing guarded by a gate through only a portion of the day seems, in my judgment, to be enhanced by the presence of such gate while unused."

WHITE BRONZE MONUMENTS.

ENDORSED BY SCIENTISTS AS PRACTICALLY Indestructible

Over 500 Beautiful Designs.

BETTER AND CHEAPER THAN ANY STONE.

Send for Price List & Circulars.

MANUFACTURED BY
MONUMENTAL BRONZE COMPANY,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Read the following Certificates of Recommendation.

[Certificate of Prof. S. P. Sharples, Assayer of Metals for the State of Mass.]

I consider the White Bronze Monuments practically indestructible. They will not blacken or become dingy with age; moss will not adhere or grow upon their surface as upon marble, and the color will remain unchangeable while the monuments endure.

S. P. SHARPLES,
State Assayer of Metals of Mass., 114 State St.
May 14, 1875. Boston.

[300 Years Without Change—Certificate of A. Cortepassi, the well known artist and sculptor of Cincinnati, Ohio, formerly of Florence, Italy.]

To whom it may concern:—This certifies that I have seen the statue of Popparona, which was cast from zinc and erected in the city of Lucca, Italy, (according to the records) over three hundred years ago, and has stood constant exposure to the elements since. No sign of corrosion or change of color has taken place and to all appearance it is as beautiful as when first erected. A. CORTEPASSI.

Feb. 21, 1876. 288 W. Fifth St., Cincinnati, O.

[Prof. Duffield, Ph. D. M. D.]

To the public:—There is no question in my mind of the durability of the White Bronze Monument. Refined zinc, when cast alone and in its pure state, and not placed in contact with silver, platinum, copper, etc., is indestructible from the elements, outlasting the best granites without the discoloration that marble always shows after a few years' exposure. No other material is so well fitted to withstand the atmospheric changes. Judging from a scientific and chemical standpoint, it is my opinion that these monuments will last thousands of years.

S. P. DUFFIELD, Ph. D., M. D.

The undersigned having received the agency for these justly celebrated Monuments, would respectfully invite all wishing to erect an enduring and suitable MEMORIAL to their departed friends, to examine the White Bronze Monuments, the most beautiful, durable and the cheapest. The best chemists and scientists in the country testify to its superiority over marble or granite. Reference is made to the many testimonials published in circulars and pamphlets which will be sent on application to the Agent, who will also furnish designs and show samples of the work and prices.

THE TRIBUNE FOR 1888

GREATLY ENLARGED.

Much the Biggest of all the New York Weeklies.

Greater Variety of Contents, New Presses, New Type and New Appliances.

At the Head of the Republican Press.

The New York Weekly Tribune will be enlarged on or before the 1st of January, 1888, by the addition of from four to eight more pages of actual reading matter—an increase of size of great expense to the Tribune, but without expense to the subscriber.

A complete outfit of the new folding and inserting presses will be put into the Tribune's press room in November and December; and the extra sheet will be folded into its place in the main sheet before it comes from the press. The enlarged Tribune will be the biggest and best of all the New York weeklies, and the new machinery will print it in an enlarged form, at the rate of seventy-two thousand copies per hour.

New Features and a great Variety of Contents will be added to THE TRIBUNE during the coming year. Readers will be given nearly a half more for their money than ever before.

Pensions for the old volunteers, especially Service Pensions, are being vigorously agitated in THE TRIBUNE; much space is given in every issue to this subject. Better Protection to Farmers under the tariff; the salvation of the country from the curse of intemperance; and the rescue of the national government from the hands of the rebel brigadiers; these, and all the other live issues of the day are receiving aggressive, earnest and loyal treatment in THE TRIBUNE.

THE TRIBUNE does not attempt to supersede the local State and county press. But, in the great Presidential conflict now at hand, every thinking Republican, old soldier, farmer and temperance man, should have his local paper and THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES—WEEKLY, $1 a year; extra copy with every five. SEMI-WEEKLY, $2 a year; extra copy with every five. DAILY, $8.50 per year. SUNDAY TRIBUNE, $1.50. KING OF ANNAM.

Donk-Khanh, the Wise Young Mongolian Sovereign.

The Daily Routine of Life in His Oriental Palace.

In a letter written last autumn from Hue to the Paris journal, Le Temps, an interesting account is given of the young King of Annam, and his manner of life. Annam has now been for about thirteen years practically a dependency of France, but the French general who is Resident at the court apparently does not interfere much with the internal affairs of the Kingdom, though he has the supreme control over its foreign politics. It is less than three years since the present King, who is still a very young man, came to the throne under the name of Donk-Khanh.

His household consists almost wholly of women, including a hundred wives, who are divided into nine classes, according to the station of life in which they are born. Thirty women guard the entrance to his private apartments, while five more are his constant personal attendants.

One of their most important duties is the care of his finger-nails, which are as long as the fingers themselves. This extraordinary length is not only the mark of his royal station, but also of the fact that he is an educated man, a "literate."

The king has three meals a day; at six and 11 in the morning and at five in the afternoon. There are fifty different dishes served at each meal, each of which is prepared by a separate cook who has no other duty than this.

At the stroke of a bell each cook hands his dish to a chamberlain, who carries it to a eunuch, who gives it to a woman, who, kneeling, presents it to the king, who barely touches it, but lives chiefly upon rice.

This rice is remarkably white and is chosen, "grain by grain," by soldiers whose special duty it is to cultivate it for the royal table. It is cooked in a new earthen dish, which is immediately broken after it has been once used. His chop-sticks are not made of ivory, like those in common use among those of high rank, but of a peculiar kind of bamboo, and are renewed every day.

The King goes to bed at 8, and rises between 5 and 6. When there is no audience to be held, he spends a large part of the day in reading the reports from the different departments, and from the governors of the provinces.

For it is a mistaken impression, the writer says, that Donk-Khanh is a weakling, a mere Oriental sensualist. He works harder at the affairs of state than many a European constitutional monarch. There is no important affair which is not submitted to him; no important question which he does not decide. He nominates all the higher officials, and there are comparatively few state papers which do not bear his signature, the stroke of a brush dipped in carmine ink showing that he has examined it.

He is a man of unusual ability, a good judge of men, and possesses a clear understanding of the difficulties of his position.

"There are some things which I would do," he said not long ago to the French Resident, with a touch of sadness in his tones. "If I were not so young, and my throne was more secure."

Though passionately fond of the chase, when recently urged to join the foreign officers in a hunting excursion, he gave as an excuse for declining, that the state of his Kingdom was such as hardly made it seemly for him to go pleasure-seeking. The only recreation which he allows himself is a daily walk or drive in his garden, and an occasional hawking excursion.

The letter closes with a short account of a sacrificial festival which the King holds in the second month of each year, which the writer says is remarkably impressive.

To Save Doctor's Bills.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet.

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold.

Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten.

After exercise of any kind never ride in an open carriage or near the window of a car for a moment; it is dangerous to health or even life.

Never omit regular bathing, for, unless the skin is in regular condition, the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases.

When hoarse, speak as little as possible until the hoarseness is recovered from, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat be produced.

Merely warm the back by the fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to the heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise, and always avoid standing on ice or snow, where the person is exposed to the cold wind.

When going from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one keep the mouth almost closed, so that the air may be warmer by its passage through the nose ere it reaches the lungs.

Keep the back, especially between the shoulder blades, well covered; also the chest well protected. In sleeping in a cold room establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open.—[Atlanta Constitution.

Bull High, But Not Pig Tight.

In Providence, the other day, they were setting some very tall poles for telephone wires—70-footers. A countryman came along and asked the foreman what his men were doing. Now, the foreman of that particular gang is a mild-mannered citizen and means to be patient and forbearing, but he is worried a good deal with questions and gets tired of answering them. In this particular case he told the countryman that he was building a wire fence. "Is that so?" said the farmer, looking aloft, and then added: 'Well, I guess you've got it bull high, but I don't believe you can make it pig tight." That foreman has been very shy of Rhode Island farmers ever since.—[Boston Herald.

Not Dangerous

Little girl (to lady caller)—Sister's awful sorry, but she can't see you today.

Lady (compassionately)—I am very sorry Mabel. I hope she is not ill?

Little girl—Oh, no; she's getting engaged.—[Harper's Weekly.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Soft Wool Instead of Starched Linen.

Now that starched linen is yielding largely to soft wool, it is interesting to know that the reign of starch has continued for a little over 300 years. The first to teach publicly how to starch linen was a Dutch woman, Mrs. Dingley. She charged $25 for teaching the art and $3 for showing how to make the starch. Starch in those days was made solely from wheat; but now, since 1841, it is made solely from corn. Most of our daily physical discomfort comes from the use of stiffened garments, especially about the neck. Let the reign of starch cease, and all hail, King Wool.—[Globe-Democrat.

The Mouth.

Half the badly shaped mouths that are the sorrows of the young women of today result from their being permitted when they were children to suck their fingers; one of the prettiest women in town has coarse, thick lips, that come from having been allowed when she was going to sleep to put her thumb in her mouth; while another, whose lips protrude in the centre and whose mouth is large, blames her mother for allowing her to find consultation in her two fingers. If persuasion will not break a child of this habit, then stronger means should be resorted to, and if necessary its hands should be tied together. Another very unfortunate habit among the school girls, and which results in thickening the lips and making them super-sensitive, is the continual biting of the lower lip. The entire shape of the face is spoiled in this way, for when nature molded it there was not the intention that the lower lip should be larger and a coarse look given to the face.—[Detroit Free Press.

The Mantilla of Modest Columbians.

One of the many curious antitheses which attracts the stranger's attention in Columbia, South America, is the universal use of the mantilla by ladies, so draped as to entirely conceal the face, while the poorer class of women are clad in a manner just sufficient for warmth. A quiet little friend of mine arriving at Bogota near Easter time decided that she would not adopt the uncomfortable fashion of swaddling her face in a mantilla, but appear in public with her husband, in an ordinary American bonnet. She attended Easter services at the cathedral but no sooner had she entered the sacred building than she was set upon by a crowd of indignant women and men who left their seats and jabbered around her in incoherent Spanish and tones of outraged modesty. "A woman without shame! a woman without shame!" She was thus driven from four churches till finally she came home defeated, and decided to adopt a mantilla. The necessity for the mantilla and the comment that ladies without escorts always excite in the public streets, render the South American housekeeper dependent on her servants for all shopping and marketing. The servants are universally thievish, and I think the shopkeepers are, as a rule, the most rascally set of tradesmen I ever heard of. The purchaser must be on the alert constantly and know the proper price of whatever she is buying, or she will pay dear for her ignorance.—[Brooklyn Citizen.

New Professions for Females.

There is good news for the persons who are always asking: "What shall my son be?" or "What am I to do with my daughters?" It is announced from Paris that a new profession has lately been started there. The French capital is celebrated for the strange callings pursued in it. It is not in Paris that the "quatorzieme" flourishes—the gentleman who sits in his chambers in full evening dress from 6 to 9 o'clock, p. m., in hopes that superstitious diners will find out that they are about to sit down thirteen, and will call him in to avert the omen? The new profession also has to do with dinner, but it is concerned with its preparation, and not its consumption. It is that of dinner-tasting. The professor, an ex-chef probably, is engaged by the host to come and sample the dishes before they are submitted to his guests. Monarchs in the middle ages had, it will be remembered, a similar functionary, whose not over enviable duty it was to see that nothing poisoned was given to his master. The "dinner-taster's" duty is rather to see that everything is properly seasoned; that the soup has enough, and not too much, salt in it; that the champagne has not been iced out of all knowledge, and so on. The success which is said to have attended the profession of dinner-testing suggests one or two other kindred possibilities. Why, for example, should not some of our unemployed elegants take to tieing the white ties of their wealthier but less nimble brethren—for a consideration, of course? Our girls, too, might make a very pretty income by assisting hostesses to decorate their rooms in an artistic manner. If these suggestions should be carried out, we shall see an immense improvement both in personal and material adornment, and at the same time the ranks of the unemployed will have been perceptibly thinned.—[London Globe.

The Vanderbilts Before Royalty.

No Americans have ever created so great a social sensation in England as the Vanderbilts. All the Mackay splendors sink into insignificance beside them, and their "siege of London" was short, since the whole social world promptly surrendered at discretion to these monarchs of millions. Of course a presentation at the English court was an important part of the success, and has been duly reported in the dispatches, which were too brief, however, to adequately convey the full gorgeousness of Mrs. Vanderbilt's appearance on the important occasion. She led the line of the little batch of Americans under the wing of the United States minister, Mr. Phelps, and her compatriots were so taken up with her jewels that they had no eyes for the display of the duchesses and countesses who thronged the ante-room. Mrs. Vanderbilt wore a dress made with a demi-train of heavy crevette pink satin, brocaded with scattered bouquets of wild roses in gold and silver. The long court train was of cream-white velvet, lined throughout with pale-yellow satin, and bordered with a wide band of cream-white curled ostrich feathers. The pink bodice was long and pointed, and draped with silver-tissue, which was held in position with pale-pink enamel wild roses, whose foliage was crusted with diamonds. The silver-tissue draperies were held at their juncture with the train by large diamond ornaments, finished with pendant chains of diamonds and pearls. Her fan was of cream-white ostrich feathers, and the same sort were in her hair, where they were held by a superb diamond aigrette. Her necklace of solitaires was estimated at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars by the women who stood about her, and those in her ears were said to represent fifteen thousand dollars more. She wore bracelets and rings of the same precious stones, and even the gold handle of her fan was thickly incrusted with these jewels. She fairly blazed with these myriad gems, and even royalty, which usually regards every one with equal civil indifference, opened its eyes and stared at the American woman's diamonds.—[Argonaut.

Fashion Notes.

Silver shoe buckles are a present finery among women.

Silk-surfaced cotton moire is made up into underskirts for watering-place wear.

The "Tosca" hat is a round hat with a low, square crown and a large flat brim.

Fruits and flowers, particularly the strawberry plant, is the favorite in trimming garden hats.

In fancy woolens and gauzes pure white is preferred to cream by young ladies this season.

London's craze just now is Pekin inch-wide stripes in stuffs of cotton, wool, silk or linen.

Blouse waists of cambric, with hand-embroidered cuffs and collars, are popular during hot weather.

Dainty screen fans are now made of artificial flowers upon a wired frame, the whole covered with white filmy tulle.

Among serviceable petticoats, nothing is better than those of biscuit calico, with three flounces embroidered in self color.

The lace net and Chantilly blouse waists are most convenient and have a dressy effect with surah, India or any other skirts.

In France specially prepared wood pulp is rapidly supplanting plaster of paris in the manufacture of all kinds of building ornaments.

Soft white India gauzes make the prettiest of summer costumes for young girls and are simply trimmed with many rows of narrow satin ribbon and a wide sash.

What is known as the London jacket is taking the place of the sailor jacket so popular last year for tiny girls. This little coat is single-breasted, with but two forms at the back, a side pocket with flaps and a turned-over collar.

A kind of Reticella lace, which is made with a crochet needle, is strong and effective, and makes pretty fancy work for leisure hours. It is useful for any purpose for which a strong trimming is needed.

Fashioning Burnt Clay Images.

Everybody is acquainted with the burnt clay figures of bulging-eyed bulldogs, slender-limbed greyhounds and great-jowled mastiffs. Very few people know, however, that many of these canine petrifactions and scores of other like figures are made in an odd little east-side den, just opposite a venerable Catholic cemetery. Children gather round the open door and gaze with big-eyed delight as the clay grows into recognizable shapes.

Over the door is an Italian sign with a cross in the middle. Within everything is the color of clay. Even the workmen have taken on the semblance of the materials in which they work. Five of them were busy yesterday transforming dozens of half-shaped clay bulldogs, greyhounds, cats and mastiffs into a very accurate semblance of these animals.

"These figures are made of composition," said one of the workmen in choice organ grinder English. "We learned the trade in Italy, where many thousands of such images are made. Here is a cat. You see it is rough and flat on the bottom, just as it came from the mould. There are fifty of them in that pile. Here are twice as many mastiffs and several dozen bulldogs. We trim them with these long, dull knives and polish them with the brushes you see in use here. When there is a hollow where no hollow should be we fill the space with soft composition. When all is done the figures are baked and glazed."

One workman was busy shaping big block-like inkstands that bore the name of a well known ink manufacturer. Another was deftly trimming the figure of a boy in gay Italian costume. The bust of a Nubian in turban and necklace stood on a shelf above.

"What figures sell best?" was asked.

"The greyhounds and the bulldogs, though the mastiffs are doing well. They are smaller and cheaper than the others, but not so ornamental."

"Who are your customers?"

"The dealers. We sell by wholesale, and the figures are sent all over the country."

"And how are workmen paid?"

"Pretty well. Very few Italians in this country earn as much as we do. You see the men here do not look like those that play hand organs and sell peanuts. At home some of us grow into sculptors."—[New York Telegram.

Every Line Worth Money.

A level-headed exchange says: "Every line of space in a newspaper is worth money, and when people beg for space, they beg for money. There are very many people, even intelligent people, who don't understand this. When they ask for the insertion of an article or paragraph which is not interesting in itself, but intended to be in the interest of some institution, charitable or otherwise, they often do so with an air of assurance that indicates that, in their opinion, they are conferring a favor rather than asking one. If it were not for the charges made for space in a newspaper, it could not exist, and all advertising should be paid for."

A Native Pecan Grove.

Colonel Nelson Tift of Dougherty county, Ga., has 1000 young pecan trees now growing. These trees came from the nuts of his large trees that are now of huge proportions—from forty to fifty feet high and their wide-spreading branches cover a circumference of 150 feet. These trees are about twenty-five years old and fruit most prolifically. The nuts are of unusual size and are greatly relished by all who have ever eaten them. The pecan thrives as well in our soil and climate as the hickory, the native growth of that family in this section.

Woodslojd.

Herr Abrahamson, of Sweden, is carrying out an educational system which is slowly spreading over the whole of Europe. It is being widely taught in the schools of his native land, but he has provided accommodation at his estate at Naas on the beautiful shores of Lake Savelangen so that students of the system, schoolmasters and others, may reside for six weeks and master the whole course. There is room for from eighty to ninety, and three courses are held during the summer. The first of the season has just come to a close. It was attended by teachers from Germany and Switzerland, and there were also eleven from England, one being a London school board master whose holidays were extended so that he might remain all the time. The others were ladies from private schools. The study is called "Woodslojd," the strange-looking word meaning sleight or skill. School children in Sweden devote from four to six hours a week to this work, and they are carried through a regular course of graduated lessons whereby they acquire mastery of the tools and considerable skill in making articles of household service. The students, however, give from seven to eight hours a day to the study, the practical work being varied by lectures by Herr Salomon, the director, who for sixteen years has been engaged in teaching teachers this most useful branch of knowledge. The mysteries of the knife, the saw and the plane are slowly revealed. A paper knife is one of the first special efforts and lessons sixteen and seventeen are devoted to the making of two wooden spoons. Two days of seven hours are occupied in the manufacture of each of them, and more than a dozen tools are required to shape, cut and carve the household treasures. The children begin this work at nine years of age, and the education of their physical powers progresses with their mental growth. It is not necessary for us to recommend slojd—its value is patent to all; but we are glad to bring to the notice of our school boards the disinterested efforts of Herr Abrahamson, who we are sure would gladly welcome a score of Scottish teachers as a first contingent to acquire the art and bring it back to our young people at school. Is it not possible that somehow amid governmental tables, schedules and compulsory subjects so important a matter as this can find a place?—[Christian Leader.

Improving on the Watch.

"The brain work on a watch," said a jeweler, "is about all in the making of the machines and instruments used in the manufacture of the watch. Each factory has its inventors, who are constantly at work on the machinery, which is improved every year. The machines are very costly, but they are easily used, and after a little practice the employe can feed them, and thousands of screws or wheels are turned out in an hour.

"There are at least twelve watch factories in this country, four of which—the Elgin, the Waltham, the United Company at Waltham and the Waterbury factories—turn out 2800 watches in a day. Many of them are sold in this country, but many find a market abroad. The American watches excel the English time-pieces. In England watch-making is just where it was a hundred years ago. There is no money back of the manufacture. There are no such factories there as in this country, where one machine will cost as much as the whole shop in England. Watch-making, or, more properly, watch-repairing, is a good trade, and it would be better if some of our educated young men had acquired it. The increasing demand for watches makes more workmen necessary to keep them in repair. Watchmakers serve seven years without pay in learning the trade. But after they have mastered the business they can command excellent wages. There are places for competent watch-repairers in this city."—[Troy Times.

The Buttermilk Cure.

Through the simplest remedies relief comes, and the new methods of medicating a patient by food chiefly are carrying out this formula in Gen. Sheridan's case. Lactic acid, which is not far off from the beverage commonly termed buttermilk, has been doing peptic wonders, it is announced. A good many people who are "out of sorts" with liver troubles might try the buttermilk cure direct without waiting for an illness to have it prescribed for them. Especially old people and worn-out people frequently find a fountain of youth in the churn's surplus.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

A Plausible Scheme.

Mr. Impecunious—George, I come to pay you that $5 I borrowed last March. That is, I'll pay you this way; you lend me $10 more, and I'll give you $5 of it.

George was so overcome with the depth of the scheme that he succumbed.—[Bazar.

A Kicker.

Charles—"The 17-year locust now devastating the West has 120 times the kicking power of a man."

Clara—"Is that so, Charles?"

"Yes, I read it in a scientific work."

"Well, Charlie, ain't you glad pa isn't a 17-year locust?"—[Siftings.

A Rare Inducement.

Mother—I want you to be good children this week.

Freddie—What will you give us if we are good.

If you are right good you can look on when your father shaves himself Sunday morning.—[Siftings.

Many CHRONIC DISEASES Successfully Treated without a Personal Consultation.

WE obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. The most ample resources for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of invalids, however distant they may reside. Write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our opinion as to its nature and curability.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES. The treatment of Diseases of the Air Passages and Lungs, such as Chronic Catarrh in the Head, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, both through correspondence and at our institutions, constitutes an important specialty.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung Diseases, which give much valuable information, viz: (1) A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, post-paid, ten cents. (2) A Treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, post-paid, ten cents. (3) A Treatise on Chronic Catarrh in the Head; price, post-paid, two cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION. Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections, are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained great success. Our Complete Treatise on Diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES. BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. These diseases are readily diagnosticated, or determined, by chemical analysis of the urine, without a personal examination of patients, who can, therefore, generally be successfully treated at their homes. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs.

CAUTION. These diseases should be treated only by a specialist thoroughly familiar with them, and who is competent to ascertain the exact condition and stage of advancement which the disease has made (which can only be ascertained by a careful chemical and microscopical examination of the urine), for medicines which are curative in one stage or condition do positive injury in others.

Being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete work on the nature and curability of these maladies, written in a style to be easily understood, we have published a large, Illustrated Treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES. INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, STONE IN THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections, may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved extraordinary success. These are fully treated of in our Illustrated Pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. Sent by mail for 10 cts. in stamps.

STRICTURE. STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULAS.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary fistulæ, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treatise on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience, is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in stamps for a large, Illustrated Treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES. Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with unusual success. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN. We have a Special Department, devoted exclusively to the treatment of Diseases of Women. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Important cases (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) have the benefit of a full Council of skilled specialists. Rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute are very private. Send ten cents in stamps for our Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with wood-cuts and colored plates (160 pages).

RADICAL CURE OF RUPTURE. HERNIA (Breach), or RUPTURE, no matter of how long standing, or of what size, is promptly and permanently cured by our specialists, without the knife and without dependence upon trusses. Abundant references. Send ten cents for our Illustrated Treatise.

PILES, FISTULÆ, and other diseases affecting the lower bowels, are treated with wonderful success. The worst cases of pile tumors, are permanently cured in fifteen to twenty days. Send ten cents for Illustrated Treatise.

WEAK MEN. Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary losses, impaired memory, mental anxiety, absence of will-power, melancholy, weak back, and all affections arising from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

We, many years ago, established a Special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced specialists.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY. We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing that no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Why any medical man, intent on doing good and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there is probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little. We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

CURED AT HOME. Most of these cases can be treated by us when at a distance as well as if here in person.

A Complete Treatise (136 pages) on these delicate diseases sent sealed, in plain envelope, secure from observation, on receipt of only ten cents, in stamps, for postage. All statements made and secrets confided to us will be held to be sacredly confidential.

All letters of inquiry, or of consultation, should be addressed to
